MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE AND BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF UNITED STATES INTERNET SERVICE PROVIDER ASSOCIATION IN SUPPORT OF RESPONDENT

The U.S. Internet Service Provider Association (“US ISPA”) respectfully moves for leave to file this brief amicus curiae in support of respondent Verizon Internet Services, Inc. (“Verizon”). Respondent has consented to the filing of this brief. Petitioner consents to the filing of the brief, but it objects to any attempt to insert new factual material into the record.

INTEREST OF *AMICUS CURIAE

US ISPA is a national trade association whose members are among the largest providers of internet service in this country. A principal purpose of US ISPA is to represent its members before Federal agencies, courts, and Congress in matters of common concern. US ISPA board members include industry experts. Their combined experience gives the US ISPA a unique understanding of the practical, as well as legal, considerations relevant to the proper interpretation and application of internet-related laws.

US ISPA and its members have a vital interest in the proper resolution of this case. Because US ISPA members are service providers as defined in 17 U.S.C. § 512(k), they expect to receive numerous subpoenas demanding information about their customers under § 512(h) if the RIAA prevails.<sup>1</sup> This expectation is based on their current experience with § 512. Every day, members of US ISPA collectively receive dozens, if not hundreds, of notifications under § 512(c) alleging online copyright infringement. US ISPA can therefore provide insight to the Court about § 512(c)'s real world operation and impact.

US ISPA seeks to assist this Court by highlighting the impact its decision may have beyond the immediate concerns of the parties to the case. Accordingly, in addressing the arguments of the parties, this brief brings to the attention of the Court relevant matters that the parties have not raised.

ARGUMENT

The statute in this case is complex -- even labyrinthine. But the practical results of the two statutory interpretations that have been urged on the Court could not be more plain. Because these practical consequences so strongly favor Verizon's construction of the statutory text, we turn to them first.

I. THE READING URGED BY RIAA WILL PRODUCE SERIOUS ABUSES OF THE SUBPOENA POWER

Section 512(h) is a remarkable piece of legislation. It confers on entire industries a largely unsupervised investigative authority. Anyone with a claim of copyright infringement can demand identifying information -- names, home phone numbers, addresses, and the like -- about a potentially unlimited number of Americans. The issue in dispute is whether this private subpoena authority should be limited to circumstances clearly anticipated by the statute or expanded to cover circumstances not contemplated by Congress. From a policy point of view, a crucial question is how this choice would affect the parties and the public -- whether expanding the subpoena power would lead to serious abuses or whether limiting the power would cause serious harm to copyright owners.

Examined in this light, the answer is clear. On the one hand, serious abuses of the subpoena power are inevitable if RIAA prevails, as amicus will show by reference to the copyright industry's current conduct. On the other, copyright owners will suffer little harm if RIAA's arguments are rejected. At worst, they will be required to get the information they want the same way every other litigant does -- by filing John Doe suits.

To this compelling and straightforward calculus, RIAA offers two principal responses. First, it denies that there's a problem: "there is no realistic prospect that 512(h) can be used for vexatious purposes." RIAA Reply Br. 12. Second, it denigrates the use of John Doe suits as burdensome for copyright owners and as offering subscribers fewer protections than § 512(h) itself. Id. at 13.<sup>2</sup> We will take each response in turn.

A. "No realistic prospect" of abuse

Verizon predicts that if the RIAA's expansive reading of § 512(h) is adopted, copyright holders will soon be using automatic computer programs, or "bots," to produce irresponsibly sweeping and poorly justified § 512(h) subpoenas covering numerous subscribers. Verizon Br. 9. In response, RIAA cites no statutory text or other principle that might prevent such abuses; it merely observes that the subpoena now before the court is limited to one person and suggests that the court need not concern itself with "totally hypothesized abuses." RIAA Reply Br. 12. MPAA responds to the same point by offering derision in lieu of analysis:

[I]t is difficult to see that day ever arriving. To begin with, it is unlikely that the federal courts will ever accept "sworn declarations" executed by computer "robots." More seriously, given the paperwork requirements of Section 512(h), it is impossible for copyright owners to pursue every individual who has taken or posted a song or

<sup>2</sup> The RIAA also offers a third response but it is less clearly stated, perhaps because a clear statement is all that is needed to refute it. RIAA Reply Br. 14. RIAA begins by noting that a § 512(h) subpoena is undisputedly available when infringing materials are stored on a service provider's system. If § 512(h) makes abuses possible, RIAA argues, there is no point in limiting the scope of § 512(h), because that will only prevent some abuses, not all of them. See id. RIAA's throw-in-the-towel approach to § 512 has no basis in law or reason.

motion picture on the Internet. The practical import of Section 512(h) is that it provides a tool for copyright owners to go after egregious infringers who are engaging in this conduct anonymously.

MPAA Br. 14 -15.

These statements are remarkable for two reasons. First, they represent the totality of the RIAA and MPAA response to this central concern. Second, they are demonstrably false. The abuses identified by Verizon are not hypothesized; they are already part of the daily experience of Internet Service Providers, or ISPs, who find themselves responding to hundreds of dragnet orders under § 512(c) every month -- orders that are plainly generated by "bots" and incorporated without even cursory review into sworn statements by RIAA, MPAA, and their members or representatives.

The experience of amicus with § 512(c) notices is a sure guide to the experience that they can expect with § 512(h) subpoenas. That is because the only hard part of generating a § 512(h) subpoena is completing the § 512(c) notification. Once that is done, the copyright owner only needs to add a suggested form of subpoena and a boilerplate declaration to the effect that it seeks only identifying information and will use the information only to protect its rights. In short, anyone who can generate a § 512(c) notice can generate a § 512(h) subpoena with two minutes' additional work. Thus, the current practices of copyright owners in sending § 512(c) notices provide the best guide to how they will behave in the context of § 512(h) subpoenas.

As an example of those practices, amicus offers Exhibit 1. This is a § 512(c) notification sent to UUNet, a major ISP, on July 18, 2001. The notice, on behalf of an undisclosed client, demands “the removal of our client’s copyrighted material from circulation” and attaches a list of hundreds of allegedly infringing computer files, all identified by IP address. There is not the slightest indication that these IP addresses have been culled so as to focus only on “egregious infringers,” as the MPAA suggests the industry will do.

Far from it. The lists have not even been culled to eliminate items that should never have been included in the first place. While most of the works identified in Exhibit 1 appear to be songs featuring George Harrison, the notice also demands removal of a file labeled, in part, “John Lennon, Yoko Ono And George Harrison Interview.mp3.” The notice further objects to a file entitled “Portrait of mrs harrison Williams 1943.jpg.” It even claims infringement by distribution of a file whose appalling title includes phrases such as “Nude Preteens and Young Teens Naked ... Brian is 14 and Harrison is 8 ....”

It is highly unlikely that a single company owns the copyright both to George Harrison’s songs and to child porn materials. The most likely explanation is that the list was generated by a “bot” that had been programmed to search for all files with the name “harrison” in them -- and that the results of its search were incorporated without a glance into the copyright owner’s § 512(c) notification.

So MPAA may be right that the federal courts will not soon accept the sworn declarations of robots. But the same cannot be said of copyright holders. It seems plain that representatives of some copyright owners are quite willing to execute sworn statements and certifications based entirely on what a computer robot tells them.

Exhibit 2 is even more telling. It is an actual § 512(h) subpoena sent to UUNet by Copyright Management Services on January 2, 2001. This subpoena, never honored according to UUNet's records, is precisely the kind of massively intrusive subpoena that RIAA and MPAA assured the Court would never be filed. It demands identifying information for no fewer than 2,635 individuals. There is no sign that the subpoena was limited to egregious offenders. Rather, the apparent intent of Copyright Management Services was to contact and "educate" the alleged infringers. "As part of this educational process," Copyright Management Services also proposed to offer the alleged infringers a chance to acquire a license for the works in question. The licensing fee is not disclosed. This raises quite plainly the risk that parties whose names and phone numbers are disclosed in response to § 512(h) subpoenas will find themselves getting called at home by unknown persons demanding that they make payments to settle infringement claims and avoid litigation. Indeed, subpoenas could be served and money demanded not just by reputable companies represented by RIAA and MPAA but also by pornography merchants. They are already aggressive litigants under § 512, ALS Scan, Inc. v. RemarQ Communities, Inc., 239 F. 3d 619 (4th Cir. 2001), and at least some of them would no doubt be tempted to turn wholesale subpoenas under § 512(h) into a new revenue stream.

It is also worth noting that in each of the two examples just discussed, copyright owners were demanding that ISPs "remove or deny access to" materials that were in fact stored on a subscriber's hard drive, not the provider's system. The fact that § 512(a) imposes no takedown obligation in those circumstances was apparently not enough to deter the submission of the notice. If copyright owners are willing to ignore the law's express limits on § 512(c) in their effort to reach peer-to-peer networks, there is little reason to hope that they will show restraint in serving subpoenas that are also aimed at peer-to-peer networks.

These are not isolated examples of abuse. In recent months, ISPs have seen an astonishing surge in notifications under § 512(c). This section of the DMCA, which took effect in 1998, was expected to impose a modest burden on ISPs asked to investigate and remove or disable access to infringing goods. And as recently as last year, that was the case. As the attached declaration shows, UUNet received fewer than twenty § 512(c) notifications a month in 2001. A year later, that number has increased tenfold. Notifications under § 512(c) now pour into UUNet at a rate up to 500 a month. Declaration of Laura R. Rohrer, attached hereto.

Whatever RIAA may say, one can hardly call this burden “totally hypothetical.” Yet that is all the comfort RIAA offers. It supplies no reason grounded in the statute why § 512(h) subpoenas will not travel the path laid down by § 512(c) notifications. It simply answers Verizon’s prediction by asserting that, because this case involves the identity of a single subscriber, there is no reason to discuss the risk of dragnet subpoenas. That, of course, is no answer at all.

B. John Doe suits as an alternative

As we have seen, great risks will attend too broad a reading of § 512(h)’s private subpoena power. What, then, is the countervailing harm to the copyright industry if such a reading is rejected? Copyright owners certainly would not be left without a way to discover the identities of infringers. They could still do what everyone else does. When ordinary companies are harmed by a party whose identity is not known, they file a John Doe suit and seek discovery of the wrongdoer's identity. The copyright industry could do the same.

On this point, RIAA's brief is remarkable for what it does not say. It does not say that this route is unavailable to its members. Instead, it says first that pursuing a John Doe suit would "serve no purpose other than to delay and increase the burden on copyright holders" and second that such suits "would result in less protection than sec. 512(h) affords, not more." RIAA Reply Br. 13.

To evaluate these assertions, it is once again instructive to look at the actual practice of members of RIAA and its amicus MPAA under § 512(c). This is because the principal protections that RIAA identifies in the § 512(h) process are in fact provided by § 512(c). For example, RIAA touts as a protection for subscribers the requirement that copyright owners identify specific works that they believe to be infringed. RIAA Reply Br. 12. That requirement is found in § 512(c)(3)(A). RIAA also emphasizes the requirement that copyright owners have a good faith belief that the use of the material is not authorized. Id. This requirement, too, is found in § 512(c)(3)(A). Indeed, as noted earlier, the only additional "protection" imposed by § 512(h) itself is requiring a boilerplate declaration that the subpoena is sought for the purpose of identifying an alleged infringer and that the information will only be used for the purpose of protecting the copyright holder's rights.

So how have the protections offered by § 512(c) worked out in practice? One answer is supplied by Exhibit 3. Sent to UUNet on December 3, 2001, it incorporates all the protections praised by RIAA. It notes that Warner Bros. owns the copyright to the motion picture "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone." It declares that a "peer-to-peer" user has infringed that copyright and demands that UUNet both disable access to the user and "terminate any and all accounts that this individual has through you." The letter identifies a single infringing file and was sent not once but twice, so there is little likelihood the material was identified unintentionally. The letter closes by revealing the size of the file -- 1k -- and the file name -- "harry potter book report.rtf".

It is safe to say that this file is not in fact a downloadable copy of the movie, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone." Even the preview trailer of this movie, which can be freely downloaded, is four thousand times the size of the file this notification complains about. The movie itself would be millions of times larger than this file. What's more, files ending in ".rtf" are almost always text files stored in "rich text format."

In short, all the evidence supplied by the notice suggests that this file is precisely what it says -- some schoolchild's report on a Harry Potter book. Yet a representative of a reputable company had no difficulty submitting a § 512(c) notification demanding on the strength of this evidence that the youngster's access to the Internet be terminated, presumably along with the access of the youngster's father, mother, and siblings. And it did so while scrupulously observing the protections trumpeted by RIAA for § 512(h) subpoenas. The company's representative identified a specific work, provided details of the infringement, and included a certification “that we have a good faith belief that use of the material ... is not authorized by Warner Bros. ... or the law.” Of course, this was not a valid notice under § 512(c) in the first place, since peer-to-peer is not properly the subject of a § 512(c) notice. But it represents precisely the kind of abuse that service providers would see if the §512(h) subpoena power were extended to § 512(a) conduct. Had this been a § 512(h) subpoena application, the company would only have had to add the boilerplate assurance about using the subscriber’s identifying information for purposes of enforcing its rights -- a “protection” that would have done nothing to prevent the subpoena from issuing.

The routine execution of slovenly notifications such as this puts the lie to RIAA’s claim that the safeguards in §§ 512(c) and (h) are superior to those available to a district court faced with frivolous litigation. If Warner Bros. had filed suit against this youngster on the basis of the evidence in this notification, Rule 11 sanctions would have been a near certainty -- unless they were deemed unnecessary because the Copyright Act itself allows defendants who prevail in copyright infringement actions to be awarded their attorneys’ fees. 17 U.S.C. § 505; Fogerty v. Fantasy, Inc., 510 U.S. 517 (1994).

The “Harry Potter book report” notification also helps illustrate what RIAA means when it complains that filing John Doe actions would “increase the burden on copyright holders attempting to protect their works from unlawful dissemination on the Internet.” RIAA Reply Br. 13. RIAA means that the effort required to actually read and think about such notifications before sending them is just too much, and that their fight against Internet piracy should not be slowed by a requirement that allegations of theft be backed by evidence that will satisfy a judge. This is an understandable view on their part. But it is profoundly dangerous to the concept of due process that ought to govern this court's interpretation of § 512(h).

In short, the abuses feared by Verizon are not hypothetical. They are real. Some copyright holders are already engaged in them on a daily basis. This court should not open the door to more, particularly when copyright holders have a perfectly adequate alternative method of discovery that will better protect innocent third parties from improper harassment.

II. COPYRIGHT OWNERS MUST SATISFY THE SUBSTANTIVE REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 512(c) AS A PRECONDITION TO THE ISSUANCE OF A SUBPOENA

Section 512(h) cannot be read in a vacuum. Subpoenas have never been viewed as an independent form of relief, but rather are an adjunct power to resolve an underlying dispute between two parties. When § 512 is examined as a whole, it is apparent that Congress granted this extraordinary subpoena power only in situations where an ISP also has a duty to remove or disable access to particular infringing materials. It did not authorize subpoenas against a service provider if the provider is merely a passive conduit, because such a provider has no statutory duty to remove or disable access to particular infringing materials.

Section 512(h) says that the copyright owner can only obtain a subpoena after it has filed "a copy of a notification described in subsection (c)(3)(A)." Congress did not allow for the use of such notices in the situation covered by subsection (a), and with good reason. There is no point in serving such a notice on an ISP acting as a conduit under subsection (a). “Conduit” service providers cannot do what a notice under § 512(c)(3)(A) asks -- they cannot remove or disable access to particular infringing materials. Thus, the central document, on which the propriety of every § 512(h) subpoena depends, simply has no relevance to service providers acting as conduits. There is therefore no basis for extending the extraordinary subpoena power conferred by § 512(h) to situations where that section’s predicate, § 512(c)(3)(A), has no application.

The RIAA proffers much smoke and not a few mirrors to obscure this fundamental flaw in its statutory reading. But only a few of its arguments actually address the (c)(3)(A) notice and its central role in the issuance of subpoenas under § 512(h).

RIAA’s principal argument about § 512(c)(3)(A) is that its substantive requirements are not incorporated into § 512(h). See RIAA Reply Br. 6-7. As RIAA puts it,

The copyright owner’s obligation under § 512(h) is to provide the information ‘described in §512(c)(3)(A),’ not to provide that information and also satisfy the conditions of §512(c) (such as the requirement that the service provider be storing infringing material under §512(c)(1)) that would trigger the provider’s obligations to take down infringing material under § 512(c).

Id. at 7.

This sentence is remarkable because it manages to misconstrue two statutory provisions in the space of twenty words. First, RIAA misrepresents the statute when it says that the owner’s obligation under § 512(h) is “to provide the information ‘described in § 512(c)(3)(A).’” Had Congress wanted merely the information described in § 512(c)(3)(A), it could have said just that. But § 512(h) directs the copyright owner to provide, not the information described in § 512(c)(3)(A), but “a copy of a notification described in § 512(c)(3)(A).” 17 U.S.C. § 512(h)(2)(A). Congress incorporated the notification itself, not its gist, into the subpoena process.

Second, RIAA’s much-italicized assertion that the copyright owner is “not [required to] satisfy the conditions of §512(c)” can scarcely be squared with statutory language that allows the subpoena to issue only “[i]f the notification filed satisfies the provisions of § 512(c)(3)(A).” 17 U.S.C. § 512(h)(4). There is no basis here for adopting RIAA’s reading -- or, more accurately, its rewrite -- of § 512(h).

RIAA’s only other effort to square its position with the statutory precedence conferred on § 512(c)(3)(A) notices is even less persuasive. RIAA argues that, even if the subpoena power does depend on a copyright owner’s authority to serve a § 512(c)(3)(A) notification, the law allows copyright owners to serve such a notice on “conduit” service providers, and those service providers have the ability to do something close to what § 512(c)(3)(A) calls for. RIAA Reply Br. 8. In fact, this is not so. Conduit service providers cannot reach into their subscribers’ computers and “remove, or disable access to, the material that is claimed to be infringing.” While acknowledging that Verizon does not have the flyswatter Congress envisioned, RIAA suggests that Verizon could use a shotgun to the same effect -- that Verizon could cut off all Internet access for the alleged infringer and the infringer’s family. RIAA Reply Br. 9. It seeks to bolster this argument by pointing out that Congress specifically contemplated termination of accounts in two circumstances -- as part of a policy for dealing with repeat infringers and as part of an injunction aimed at infringers beyond the jurisdiction of the courts. Id. But these two isolated references to account termination simply demonstrate that Congress knew how radical such relief was. It also knew how to call for such terminations when it thought them proper -- and it did not think them proper as a response to a § 512(c)(3)(A) notice.

In a last, rather desperate, effort to avoid this issue, RIAA claims that Verizon has conceded RIAA's legal point because, a year or more ago, a midlevel manager in Verizon's subpoena compliance office made a casual reference to receiving a subpoena under § 512(h). RIAA Reply Br. 3, 8. RIAA offers no support for the proposition that Verizon is legally bound by a reference not made in a litigation context and not made by anyone authorized to establish Verizon's legal positions. More importantly, this Court cannot be bound the prior statements because the issue goes to the Court's jurisdiction under § 512(h). An issue of this importance must be decided in accordance with Congress's intent, and not on the basis of "gotcha" lawyering.

CONCLUSION

The Court should deny RIAA's motion to enforce the subpoena.

Respectfully submitted,

Anthony C. Epstein.

Case No. 1:02MS00323
Honorable John D. Bates

DECLARATION OF LAURA R. ROHRER

I, Laura R. Rohrer, have personal knowledge of the facts stated below.

1. I am an employee in the subpoena compliance unit of UUNET Technologies, Inc.
2. I am submitting this declaration in support of the Amicus brief of US ISPA in Recording Industry Association of America v. Verizon Internet Services, Inc.
3. On September 10, 2002, I prepared a summary of all the notifications under 17 U.S.C. § 512(c) that were served on UUNET since the beginning of 2001. I calculated the number of such notices filed in each month. The results are as follows:

	2001	2002
January	8	36
February	12	19
March	12	97
April	7	408
May	20	105
June	16	304
July	25	531
August	15	381
September	24	-----
October	29	-----
November	20	-----
December	39	-----

4 On September 11, 2002, I collected from the records stored by the subpoena compliance unit and the legal department several examples of the notifications under 17 U.S.C. § 512(c) and a subpoena that were served on ULNET in the past two years. These are attached:

- a. Exhibit 1. A notice sent by Mediaforce on July 18, 2001 on behalf of an unnamed client alleging copyright infringement at hundreds of individual Internet protocol addresses.
- b. Exhibit 2. A subpoena sent by Copyright.net on January 2, 2001 seeking information sufficient to identify a list of 2,635 individual subscribers. ULNET's records indicate that no subscriber information was disclosed in response to this subpoena.
- c. Exhibit 3. Two notices sent by Mediaforce on December 3, 2001 alleging unauthorized distribution of the copyrighted motion picture entitled Harry Potter.

5 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct.

Re: Subpoena For Release of Identification Under 17 U.S.C. § 512(h)

Dear Mr Smith:

In our capacity as a duly authorized agent of the music publishers contained in the attached subpoena (hereinafter the "Publishers"), we are contacting you in regard to the Notices of Copyright Infringement (the "Notice") recently sent to UUNET Technologies, Inc. The Publishers are owners of the copyrighted musical compositions listed on the Notice attached to the subpoena. Furthermore, 2,635 individual subscribers of your service were identified as infringing these copyrighted works by posting the works for on a computer using IPAddress controlled by UUNET Technologies, Inc.

We have noted that you are the designated agent for UUNET Technologies, Inc. and, thus are aware of the notice provision provided in 17 U.S.C. Section 512 of the Digital Millennium Copyright Act ("DMCA"). In addition, the DMCA outlines a subpoena process that allows copyright owners to obtain from a service provider certain information concerning users who have posted infringing works or have otherwise violated copyright law. Specifically, under 17 U.S.C. Section 512(h), a copyright owner can request the clerk of a U.S. District Court to issue a subpoena to a service provider for information concerning the identity of an infringer

In accordance with this provision, the Publishers have attached a proper, fully executed, DMCA subpoena issued by the clerk of court for the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee. As required under Section 512(h)(3) UUNET Technologies, Inc., as the service provider, is required to provide information whereby the individual who has infringed the Publishers' copyrighted musical composition may be identified.

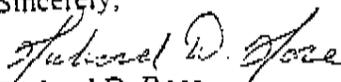

It is the goal of the Publishers to work with you in educating your subscribers about the consequences of online copyright infringement. As part of this educational process, the Publishers are willing to offer your subscribers the opportunity to obtain a valid license to personally use or distribute the work on the Internet. Ideally, we hope that by educating your subscribers about their rights and responsibilities under the law, it will deter those who previously believed they could post works for distribution using UUNET Technologies, Inc.'s network for infringing activities.
