AFFIRMATION OF PROFESSOR
STEPHEN GILLERS

I, Stephen Gillers, an attorney admitted to practice before this Court, and the Courts of the State of New York, hereby affirm under penalty of perjury as follows:

1. I am a chaired professor of law at New York University School of Law. I have been on the faculty since 1978 and was vice dean from 1999 to 2004. I have taught Regulation of Lawyers (“legal ethics”) at NYU and as a visitor elsewhere since 1978 and am author of a leading casebook in the field, first published in 1985 and now in a seventh edition (published in 2005). My field of study encompasses the ethical and legal rules governing the legal and judicial professions in the United States. I have written extensively on legal ethics in law journals and in the law and popular press. I have spoken on legal ethics at bar associations nationwide, at law firms, at law school conferences, and at corporate law offices. In New York, I have served on the ethics committee of the Association of the Bar and on the Departmental Disciplinary Committee of the First Department Appellate Division. I am the chair of the American Bar Association's Joint Committee on Lawyer Regulation, whose charge is to assist American jurisdictions in adopting ethics rules for lawyers. A recent resume accurately reflecting my qualifications is annexed as Exhibit A.

2. The Center for Constitutional Rights ("CCR") has asked my opinion regarding the professional responsibility of its lawyers, given the kind of legal work it does and the clients it serves, now that it is on notice of the NSA program described below.

3. With regard to the work CCR does, I assume familiarity with the Affirmation of William Goodman In Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment dated March 9, 2006 and submitted to the Court in the captioned matter and also with the Complaint in the action. With regard to the NSA program, I assume the accuracy of this description contained in the papers CCR has submitted in connection with its summary judgment motion and its complaint. In particular, I assume the truth of these allegations which I excerpt from those documents (with footnote citations omitted):

As part of the Program, the NSA targets for interception "calls ... [the government has] a reasonable basis to believe involve Al Qaida or one of its affiliates." The NSA also targets the communications of individuals it deems suspicious on the basis of the NSA's belief that the targeted individuals have some unspecified "link" to al Qaeda or unspecified related terrorist organizations, belong to an organization that the government considers to be "affiliated" with al Qaeda, have provided some unspecified support for al Qaeda, or "want to kill Americans." Information collected under the Program is sometimes retained and sometimes disseminated. The Attorney General has refused to specify the number of Americans whose communications have been or are being intercepted under the Program.

The NSA intercepts communications under the Program without obtaining a warrant or any other type of judicial authorization. Nor does the President or the Attorney General authorize the specific interceptions. Instead, an NSA “shift supervisor” is authorized to approve the selection of targets or of communications to be intercepted.

Under the Program, communications are intercepted without probable cause to believe that the surveillance targets have committed or are about to commit any crime, or are foreign powers or agents thereof. Rather, the NSA intercepts communications when the agency has, in its own judgment, merely a “reasonable basis to conclude that one party to the communication is a member of al Qaeda, affiliated with al Qaeda, or a member of an organization affiliated with al Qaeda, or working in support of al Qaeda.” Principal Deputy Director for National Intelligence (and former NSA Director) General Michael Hayden has admitted that “[t]he trigger is quicker and a bit softer than it is for a FISA warrant,” and has suggested that the standard is “[i]nherent foreign intelligence value.” Attorney General Gonzales has conceded that the standard used is not criminal “probable cause.”

A Lawyer’s Responsibility with Regard to the Confidences of a Client

4. I will frame this discussion mainly in terms of the New York law and rules but my conclusions would be the same in other jurisdictions.

5. DR 4-101 (A) and (D) or the New York Code of Professional Responsibility (“CPR”) provide:

A. “Confidence” refers to information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, and “secret” refers to other information gained in the professional relationship that the client has requested be held inviolate or the disclosure of which would be embarrassing or would be likely to be detrimental to the client.

D. A lawyer shall exercise reasonable care to prevent his or her employees, associates, and others whose services are utilized by the lawyer from disclosing or using confidences or secrets of a client, except that a lawyer may reveal the information allowed by DR 4-101(C) through an employee.

6. DR 4-101(A) applies to both “secrets” and “confidences.” These categories encompass information from a client (also protected by the attorney-client privilege) and also information learned from other sources while working for a client and which, even if not privileged, are treated by the Code as confidential.

7. These provisions are also part of the New York Court rules, specifically Rule 1200.19. In addition, ethics committees of bar associations in New York have repeatedly cited a lawyer’s affirmative duty to protect client confidences. See, e.g., New York State Opinion 709 (1998) (“It is fair to state that an attorney has a duty to use reasonable care to protect client confidences and secrets”); New York State Opinion 700 (1998) (“the ethical obligation of a lawyer to guard the confidences and secrets of a client ‘exists without regard to the nature or source of information or the fact that others share the knowledge’”). See also Flores v. Willard J. Price Assoc., LLC, 799 N.Y.S.2d 43, 45 (1st Dep’t 2005) (“attorneys have continuing obligations to protect their clients’ confidences”).

The CCR’s DR 4-101 Duty In Light of the NSA Program

8. In light of what is now known about the ongoing NSA program and given the nature of CCR’s work as detailed in submissions to the Court, CCR attorneys and their support persons have substantial reason to fear that telephonic, fax, and e-mail communications (“electronic means of communication”) that they may have or have had with CCR clients, or with third persons or each other in the course of representing clients, have been or will be intercepted by the United States. As a result of this knowledge, CCR attorneys may not ethically use (and must instruct support persons not to use) these electronic means of communication in exchanging or collecting information about client matters that the New York Code defines as a secret or confidence. Nearly all communications with or about clients will fall within these definitions. To use electronic means of communication with regard to this information would be to fail adequately to protect this information and would violate DR 4-101(A).

9. I want to stress that in my opinion this is not merely a situation where CCR has the discretion to elect to avoid electronic means of communication in order to assure its clients greater protection. The decision here is not discretionary. It is obligatory. As should therefore be evident, this limitation on CCR's professional work severely restricts its ability to represent its clients in the United States and abroad.

10. It is no answer to say that suppression is available as a remedy for any improperly intercepted communication. CCR and its clients may never know which communications may have been intercepted. Intercepted communications may be exploited to the disadvantage of clients with no one the wiser. In any event, whether intercepted communications are or are not ever used to the disadvantage of a client or otherwise is irrelevant. CCR has a duty to protect its clients' secrets and confidences regardless of the use to which an interceptor may put the information. It is disclosure itself that is the evil against which lawyers must protect clients, regardless of any additional consequences of the disclosure.

11. There is one exception to what I have written. Some communications with clients or others may, in an attorney's professional opinion, be sufficiently innocuous that the attorney concludes that notwithstanding the risk of interception, they may be transmitted electronically or by telephone. In making this decision, the attorney must balance the urgency of the communication need, the substance of the communication, and the attorney's duty competently, diligently, and zealously to represent his or her client. For the reasons given, however, this exception cannot justify the use of telephone, e-mail or fax to transmit information that in the attorney's professional opinion is sensitive, by which I mean information the discovery of which would in the attorney's considered judgment harm the client's cause.

I affirm under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

Stephen Gillers, Esq.
