1 INTRODUCTION

2 Section 802 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (“FISA”) Amendments
3 Act of 2008, (“FISAAA”), codified at 50 U.S.C. § 1885a, is a blatant attempt to prevent this 4 Court—and every other court, federal or state—from deciding whether the carrier defendants 5 conducted dragnet, warrantless surveillance of millions of Americans’ communications and 6 communications records in violation of the Constitution and numerous statutes.

7 The carriers and the government portray section 802 as merely a decision by Congress 8 about plaintiffs’ remedies; after all, they say, plaintiffs may instead sue the government. But 9 statutes cannot override the constitutional protections all Americans enjoy from the government’s 10 agents any more than the government itself can. This attempt to destroy plaintiffs’ constitutional 11 claims alone dooms section 802. Moreover, the sham proceeding established by section 802 12 violates due process in myriad ways.

13 But section 802 is far, far more: it is an attempt to manipulate the judiciary and subvert the 14 Constitution. Underlying the Constitution lies the bedrock, structural principle of the separation of 15 powers, by which the Framers sought “to assure as nearly as possible, that each branch of 16 government would confine itself to its assigned responsibility. The hydraulic pressure inherent 17 within each of the separate Branches to exceed the outer limits of its power, even to accomplish 18 desirable objectives, must be resisted.” I.N.S. v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 951 (1983).

19 Section 802 crosses those limits by explicitly giving the Attorney General the power to 20 partially repeal previously enacted law, delegating standardless discretion to the Attorney General, 21 and requiring courts to accept the Attorney General’s factual findings without independent judicial 22 review. It also violates the Constitution by giving the Attorney General the unilateral authority to 23 gag the court and hide court processes from the plaintiffs and the public. Accordingly, this Court 24 must find section 802 unconstitutional.

25 ARGUMENT

26 I. Section 802 Cannot Trump The Constitution

27 The Court should strike down section 802 because it would extinguish plaintiffs’ 28 substantive constitutional claims against the carriers without permitting any court to assess whether

1 the carriers violated the Constitution.¹ The carriers agree that under section 802 whether “the 2 alleged surveillance violated the Fourth Amendment ... is irrelevant ... since nothing about the 3 government’s motion requires the Court to assess the legality of any such surveillance.” Carriers’ 4 Br. (Dkt. 506) at 8, n.13. Section 802 therefore forecloses adjudication of plaintiffs’ claims that the 5 carriers are committing massive constitutional violations. It also creates a model for barring any 6 judicial relief against private entities violating the Constitution at the government’s behest.

7 The carriers respond with two specious arguments. First, they argue that section 802 neither 8 creates a new constitutional standard nor allows the Attorney General to override judicial 9 interpretations of the Constitution. But section 802 overrides the scope and substance of 10 constitutional protections through newly created statutory “defenses” to constitutional claims.²
 11 Indeed, the carriers’ argument is belied by their other arguments that section 802 works a 12 substantive change in the underlying law.³

13 Second, implicitly conceding plaintiffs’ main point—that Congress may not abrogate 14 constitutional claims—the carriers argue that plaintiffs may still sue the government. Yet, tellingly, 15 they cite no authority providing that Congress can eliminate all claims for relief against the carriers 16 simply because other claims may exist against the government.

17 A. Section 802 Prevents Courts From Deciding Whether The Carriers Violated
 18 The Constitution

19 The carriers argue that section 802 “merely alters the remedies available against” them, 20 Carriers’ Br. at 7:14, and does not prevent courts from interpreting the Constitution. This argument

21 ¹ Section 802 also eliminates state jurisdiction over these claims. See 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(g).

22 ² See Gov’t Reply at 5, n.4 (section 802 “establish[ed] a defense” to plaintiffs’ constitutional 23 claims). Section 802(a), however, does not create affirmative defenses. An affirmative defense is 24 “[a] defendant’s assertion raising new facts and arguments that, if true, will defeat the plaintiff or 25 prosecutor’s claim, even if all the allegations in the complaint are true.” BLACK’S LAW 26 DICTIONARY 343 (7th Ed., Abridged, 2000). Section 802(a), by contrast, (1) is asserted at the sole discretion of the Attorney General; (2) is inoperative, even if the underlying facts are true, unless asserted by the Attorney General; and (3) depends in part upon the relevant allegations in the complaint being false (especially with respect to subsection 802(a)(5)).

27 ³ See Carriers’ Br. at 8-10, 10:7-9 (“§ 802 articulates rules ... that work a change in the law”), 28 10:18-20 (“the substantive change in the law governing carrier liability for alleged assistance to the U.S. intelligence community that is reflected in the new immunities ... is plain”).

1 is sophistry. Elsewhere, the carriers and the government agree that section 802 eliminates 2 constitutional inquiry. Carriers' Br. at 8, n.13; Corrected Gov't Reply Br. (Dkt. 560) ("Gov't 3 Reply") at 5-6, n.5. Indeed, this is exactly what the Attorney General seeks from FISAAA: to 4 eliminate a "merits adjudication of the plaintiffs' constitutional claims." Summary of Evidence 5 (Dkt. 481) ("Summary") at 60:25-28. Thus, the carriers' argument is that courts may interpret the 6 Constitution in other cases—but not this one.

7 Section 802 is therefore invalid. Because Congress can never authorize violations of the 8 Constitution, section 802 cannot shield the carriers' unconstitutional acts. An immunity grant can 9 only shield acts that, though unlawful when committed, could have been made legal had Congress 10 "acted ... in advance" to authorize them. Mitchell v. Clark, 110 U.S. 633, 640 (1884).

11 Section 802's elimination of constitutional review of the carriers' acts distinguishes the 12 qualified immunity cases, where courts first decide the merits of a constitutional claim and only 13 then decide whether damages liability is barred because the right was not clearly established at the 14 time of violation.⁴ Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201 (2001).⁵ Further distinguishing them is the 15 fact that, under qualified immunity, violations of clearly established constitutional rights, like those

16
17 ⁴ The carriers' argument that Congress "could block constitutional claims for equitable relief 18 against the carriers," Carriers' Br. at 6:5 & n. 10, suffers from a similar flaw. For instance, even 19 under the Anti-Injunction Act courts have maintained control over equitable relief, including 20 finding many exceptions. Bob Jones Univ. v. Simon, 416 U.S. 725, 742-46 (1974) (detailing 21 history). The Tax Injunction Act, which prohibits federal injunctions against the collection of state 22 taxes, rests on considerations of federalism absent here, and assumes that the same claims can be 23 litigated in state courts. Franchise Tax Bd. of Cal. v. Alcan Aluminum Ltd., 493 U.S. 331, 338
24 (1990); id. at 339 (the result "might well" be different were there no state remedy). Finally, Dotson 25 v. Griesa, 398 F.3d 156 (2d Cir. 2005), is irrelevant. The plaintiff in Dotson could obtain the 26 precise equitable relief at issue through the judiciary's administrative process. Id. at 180-181. The 27 Ninth Circuit distinguished Dotson on precisely this basis, noting that "the employee had other 28 remedial mechanisms available." Am. Fed. Gov't Employees v. Stone, 502 F.3d 1027, 1038 (9th Cir. 2007) (statutory scheme governing TSA security screeners did not preclude judicial review of screeners' constitutional challenges to their termination); id. ("The power of the federal courts to grant equitable relief for constitutional violations has long been established."). In short, the defendants cite no case, and plaintiffs know of none, where a statute denying all judicial review of constitutional claims against a particular defendant was upheld in the absence of alternative proceedings that could provide the relief sought against that defendant.

⁵ The Supreme Court currently has under submission Pearson v. Callahan, No. 07-751 (argued Oct. 14, 2008) in which it is considering modifying or overruling the Saucier test.

1 alleged by plaintiffs, are always adjudicated on the merits. See Hepting v. AT&T Corp., 439
2 F. Supp. 2d 974, 1010 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (“AT&T’s alleged actions here violate the constitutional 3 rights clearly established in Keith.”). Nor is section 802 like a statute of limitations. Congressional 4 power over procedures does not allow Congress to exceed constitutional limits. Steadman v.
5 S.E.C., 450 U.S. 91, 96 (1981) (courts defer to Congress’s power to prescribe procedural rules in 6 federal courts “absent countervailing constitutional constraints”); Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U.S. 595, 7 603 (1878) (unreasonably short statutes of limitations “designed to defeat the remedy” are 8 unconstitutional).

9 Section 802 not only deprives plaintiffs of their constitutional claims against the carriers, 10 but also prevents the constitutional adjudication that keeps government within the bounds of law.
11 See Saucier, 533 U.S. at 201 (requiring courts to rule on “whether a constitutional right was 12 violated on the premises alleged” so that the court may “set forth principles which will become the 13 basis for a holding that a right is clearly established,” even if there ultimately is no liability).

14 Provisions like section 802, if valid, would permit the political branches to strategically 15 “switch the Constitution on or off at will.” Boumediene v. Bush, ___ U.S. ___, 128 S. Ct. 2229, 2259
16 (2008). This danger is especially grave for the Fourth Amendment. The Warrant Clause expressly 17 commands that courts authorize and supervise the Executive’s exercise of the power to search and 18 seize. Section 802 effectively nullifies the judicial role in enforcing Keith’s warrant requirement for 19 domestic searches.⁶ Also, warrantless searches are subject to de novo appellate review. Ornelas v.
20 U.S., 517 U.S. 690, 697 (1996) (“[T]he legal rules for probable cause and reasonable suspicion 21 acquire content only through application. Independent review is therefore necessary if appellate 22 courts are to maintain control of, and to clarify, the legal principles.”). Yet under section 802, the 23 Attorney General can retroactively shield the carriers from any judicial scrutiny of their 24

25 ⁶ The carriers’ attempt to portray their acts as warrantless “foreign intelligence” surveillance, 26 Carriers’ Br. at 8, n.13, is foreclosed by this Court’s finding that “[b]ecause the alleged dragnet 27 here encompasses the communications of ‘all or substantially all of the communications 28 transmitted through [AT&T’s] key domestic telecommunications facilities,’ it cannot reasonably be said that the program as alleged is limited to tracking foreign powers.” Hepting, 439 F. Supp. 2d at 1010.

1 unconstitutional conduct.

2 B. The Possibility Of An Action Against The Government Cannot Justify 3 Foreclosure Of Plaintiffs' Constitutional Claims Against The Carriers

4 A claim seeks relief against a specific party or parties. Plaintiffs' claims are aimed at what 5 the carriers did, not at what the government did. The carriers' acts were the direct and immediate 6 cause of plaintiffs' injuries, and there is independent constitutional value in addressing their 7 conduct. See Summary at 21-41. Indeed, the carriers have the primary duty to protect their 8 customers' constitutional rights from the government, since the carriers control access to their 9 customers' communications and communications records. The carriers' decision to ignore that 10 duty, accede to patently unconstitutional requests, and build a vast surveillance infrastructure in 11 order to do so, demonstrates why private parties have long been held accountable for their own 12 unconstitutional acts done as agents to the government. Only relief against the carriers can deter
13 such future constitutional violations.⁷

14 Defendants cite only two cases for the proposition that suing the government avoids the 15 constitutional error that would arise if section 802 were to preclude plaintiffs' constitutional claims 16 against defendants, Anniston Mfg. Co. v. Davis, 301 U.S. 337 (1937) and Burrill v. Locomobile
17 Co., 258 U.S. 34 (1922).⁸ Those cases, each relating to improperly collected taxes, are easily 18 distinguished.

19 First, neither case involved claims against private actors nor foreclosed any relief that the 20 ⁷ Bivens remedies against federal officials would not reach carrier officials or employees who 21 directed and implemented the warrantless dragnet, and thus could not deter constitutional 22 violations by the carriers or their employees. Moreover, suits against the government, such as 23 under the Federal Tort Claims Act, are less effective remedies. Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 21

24 (1980) ("Because the Bivens remedy is recoverable against individuals, it is a more effective 25 deterrent than the FTCA remedy against the United States. It is almost axiomatic that the threat of 26 damages has a deterrent effect, surely particularly so when the individual official faces personal 27 financial liability.") (citations and footnote omitted); id. at 22 ("a plaintiff cannot opt for a jury in 28 an FTCA action, 28 U.S.C. § 2402, as he may in a Bivens suit.") (footnote omitted).

⁸ The government also cites Flores-Miramonte v. INS, 212 F.3d 1133, 1134 (9th Cir. 2000), where the Ninth Circuit found that it lacked jurisdiction to review a Board of Immigration Appeal decision, but that petitioner could file a habeas petition "raising the same claims." The case is inapposite because both the foreclosed and permitted actions were against the government and neither the claims raised nor the relief sought by the petitioner was foreclosed.

1 plaintiff was seeking. Anniston and Burrill were damages actions against the tax collectors 2 themselves, and the statutes substituted the government for the collectors. Anniston, 301 U.S. at 3 342-43; Burrill, 258 U.S. 34. Substituting a public entity for a public employee while fully 4 preserving the availability of the relief sought by the plaintiff is far different from section 802, 5 which wipes out any possible claims or relief against the carriers or their employees without 6 substituting any other party.

7 Second, in Anniston, Congress created a comprehensive and procedurally adequate 8 administrative scheme to adjudicate the very claims asserted by the plaintiffs. 301 U.S. at 343. The 9 government recognized its obligation to refund the unconstitutional taxes, and the substitute 10 remedy embraced “whatever right of refund the claimant is entitled to assert under the Federal 11 Constitution.” Id. at 343. The Court upheld the procedure because it provided “for the judicial 12 determination of every question of law which the claimant is entitled to raise The ‘law,’ with 13 which the decision of the Board may be in conflict, may be the fundamental law.” Id. at 345.

14 Section 802 creates no alternative administrative scheme for adjudicating plaintiffs’ claims 15 against the carriers. Rather, it blocks those claims and eliminates judicial review of the carriers’ 16 conduct, even under “the fundamental law”—the Constitution. Finally, plaintiffs are left, not with a 17 guaranteed remedy against the government, but with merely their original right to sue the 18 government subject to all of the government’s defenses and immunities.

19 The carriers also prematurely argue that plaintiffs cannot state Bivens claims against them 20 as corporate entities, although they do not attack the viability of Bivens claims against their 21 employees.⁹ Carriers’ Br. at 5-6. Plaintiffs disagree, but regardless, this is not a motion to dismiss 22

23 ⁹ See, e.g., Hepting Amended Complaint (Hepting Dkt. 8) at ¶ 31 (naming “Doe” private 24 employees as defendants). In the decision relied on by the carriers, injunctive relief and alternative 25 state-law remedies were available against the corporation and its employees. Corr. Services Corp.
26 v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 72-74 (2001); see also Bush v. Lucas, 462 U.S. 367, 385 (1983) (federal 27 employees whose First Amendment rights were allegedly violated had alternative remedy because 28 Congress had created an “elaborate, comprehensive [civil service review] scheme that encompasses substantive provisions forbidding arbitrary action by supervisors and procedures ... by which improper action may be redressed”); Agyeman v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 390 F.3d 1101, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2004). Here, section 802 destroys all alternative remedies against the carriers and their employees, including any Bivens action against the employees. See Agyeman, 390 F.3d at 1104.

1 for failure to state a Bivens claim. More importantly, failure to state a Bivens claim is not a ground 2 under section 802 for terminating plaintiffs' lawsuits.

3 Neither the government nor the carriers argue that section 802 can be saved from 4 unconstitutionality by preserving only plaintiffs' constitutional claims and dismissing their non-5 constitutional claims. They are correct not to do so. First, section 802's termination of plaintiffs'
6 non-constitutional claims is equally unconstitutional. Second, severance is not possible here
7 because Congress intended that whenever the Attorney General chose to change the law and invoke 8 section 802 it would terminate the entire action, not just a portion of it. Section 802(a) provides that 9 the "action," and not just some of the claims in the action "shall be promptly dismissed." See also 10 S. Rep. 110-209 at 10, 11 (2007) (Dkt. 469-2) ("SSCI Report") (referring to "alleged statutory and 11 constitutional violations"). The "relevant inquiry in evaluating severability is whether the statute 12 will function in a manner consistent with the intent of Congress." Alaska Airlines v. Brock, 480 13 U.S. 678, 681 (1984) (emphasis original). An interpretation of section 802 requiring dismissal of 14 only non-constitutional claims would be inconsistent with Congress' intent.¹⁰

15 II. Section 802 Violates The Doctrine Of Separation of Powers

16 A. Section 802 Violates The Lawmaking Procedures Of Article I, Section 7 By 17 Giving The Attorney General Plenary Power To Change The Law Governing 18 Plaintiffs' Lawsuits

18 Under the lawmaking procedures of Article I, section 7 of the Constitution, any change in 19 previously enacted law must be enacted by Congress. Clinton v. City of New York, 524 U.S. 417, 20 445 (1998). Congress may not give the Executive the power to change law that Congress has 21 previously enacted; Congress itself must make the decision to change the law. Id. To do otherwise 22 would impermissibly combine two powers in a single branch. "These provisions of Art. I are 23 ¹⁰ Although the statute contains a severability clause, FISAA § 401, "the ultimate determination 24 of severability will rarely turn on the presence or absence of ... a [severability] clause." U.S. v.

25 Jackson, 390 U.S. 570, 586 (1968). Congress's clear intent makes it impossible to construe 26 section 802 to permit dismissal only of plaintiffs' non-constitutional claims. Courts " 'will not 27 rewrite a ... law to conform it to constitutional requirements.' " Reno v. A.C.L.U., 521 U.S. 844, 28 884 (1997) (addressing similar severability clause); see also id. at 882 ("A severability clause requires textual provisions that can be severed."); Hill v. Wallace, 259 U.S. 44, 49 (1922) (court may not "dissect an unconstitutional measure and reframe a valid one out of it by inserting limitations it does not contain").

1 integral parts of the constitutional design for the separation of powers.” Chadha, 462 U.S. at 946.
2 “[T]he prescription for legislative action in Art. I, §§ 1, 7, represents the Framers’ decision that the 3 legislative power of the Federal Government be exercised in accord with a single, finely wrought 4 and exhaustively considered, procedure.” Id. at 951.

5 Here, plaintiffs sued under previously-enacted statutes that applied to these actions until the 6 Attorney General chose to nullify those statutes and change the law governing these actions by 7 filing his certification. But for the Attorney General’s decision to change the law, those previously-8 enacted statutes would still govern plaintiffs’ actions.

9 As was true of the appropriations statute in Clinton, it is the Attorney General’s 10 certification, not Congress’ enactment of section 802, that deprives the statutes under which 11 plaintiffs sued of any “ ‘legal force or effect’ ” (Clinton, 524 U.S. at 438) as to these lawsuits. The 12 certification is thereby “the functional equivalent of partial repeals of Acts of Congress.” Id. at 444.
13 This is because section 802 provides that “[n]otwithstanding any other provision of law, a civil 14 action may not lie or be maintained in a Federal or State court against any person for providing 15 assistance to an element of the intelligence community, and shall be promptly dismissed, if the 16 Attorney General certifies to the district court” that one of the requirements of subsections (a)(1)- 17 (5) is satisfied. Whether or not to file a certification is entirely within the Attorney General’s 18 power. Even where one of the requirements of subsections (a)(1)-(5) is satisfied, he has no duty to 19 file a certification. If the Attorney General does file a certification, then the law changes and 20 section 802 governs the action. If he does not file a certification, section 802 does not apply and the 21 law governing the action remains unchanged.

22 Section 802 thus authorizes the Attorney General “himself to effect the repeal of laws, for 23 his own policy reasons, without observing the procedures set out in Article I, § 7. The fact that 24 Congress intended such a result is of no moment.” Clinton, 524 U.S. at 445; accord, Metro. Wash.
25 Airports Auth. v. Citizens for Abatement of Aircraft Noise, 501 U.S. 252, 274 n.19 (1991) 26 (“ ‘Rather than turning the task over to its agent, if the Legislative Branch decides to act with 27 conclusive effect, it must do so ... through enactment by both Houses and presentment to the 28 President.’ ”). With respect to plaintiffs’ state-law causes of action, the Attorney General’s

1 certification similarly changes the law by preempting them.

2 The Attorney General's decision to change the law governing plaintiffs' actions is a 3 straightforward violation of the lawmaking procedures of Article I, section 7. Just as in Clinton, 4 where nothing in the statute required the President to veto or leave standing a particular 5 appropriation, nothing in section 802 requires the Attorney General to file a certification. Just as in 6 Clinton, it is the Attorney General, not the Congress, who decides whether to supplant the existing 7 law with new law. Congress' decision to give over its power to change the law to the Attorney 8 General violates Article I, section 7.

9 B. The Government And The Carriers Misdescribe Section 802's Terms

10 The government and the carriers have no response other than to misdescribe section 802.
11 They attempt to avoid the inevitable conclusion that section 802 runs afoul of Article I, section 7 12 and other separation of powers principles by defending section 802 as they wish it were written 13 rather than addressing the statute enacted by Congress. They describe an imaginary statute, one in 14 which Congress directed that new rules should apply to plaintiffs' actions. But Congress made no 15 such decision; instead it is the Attorney General's filing of a certification that has changed the law 16 governing these actions. Section 802 grants to the Executive the power to replace the law that 17 currently applies to these lawsuits with a statute designed to lead to their dismissal.

18 The government's and the carriers' mischaracterizations of section 802 contradict their 19 previous descriptions of section 802. Previously, the government and the carriers had conceded that 20 "Congress left the issue of whether and when to file a certification to the discretion of the Attorney 21 General." Joint Case Mgmt. Stmt. (Dkt. 466) at 21:3-5. They asserted: "Nothing in the Act requires 22 the Attorney General to exercise his discretion to make the authorized certifications, and until he 23 actually decides to invoke the procedures authorized by Congress, the Act would have no impact 24 on this litigation." Id. at 22, n.16.

25 Now that the constitutional infirmity of this scheme is manifest, however, the carriers and 26 the government paint a far different picture of section 802. The carriers now contend that Congress, 27 not the Attorney General, mandated that section 802 should govern plaintiffs' actions and imposed 28 a mandatory duty on the Attorney General to submit evidence necessary to demonstrate that the

1 requirements of subsections (a)(1)-(5) are satisfied. They contend that in section 802 Congress 2 created mandatory “new immunity defenses” that “apply whenever § 802’s requirements are met.”
3 Carriers’ Br. at 9:2-3, 9:5-6 (emphasis added). They assert that “Congress ... imposed on the 4 Attorney General the responsibility to determine when evidence exists that would satisfy the 5 statutory standards and to submit that evidence to a court.” (id. at 2:9-11).

6 The government has similarly reversed its position, now contending that “Congress 7 concluded that those companies [i.e., the carriers] should not face further litigation if they provided 8 such assistance pursuant to a court order or a written certification, directive, or request from a 9 senior government official, or did not provide the alleged assistance” (Gov’t Reply at 1:7-10) and 10 that “Congress ... made it clear that dismissal was required where provider assistance or non-11 assistance satisfied the conditions in Section 802(a)” (id. at 9:10-13 (emphasis added)).

12 All of these erroneous assertions ignore the blunt reality that Congress did not decide 13 whether section 802’s provisions should apply to plaintiffs’ lawsuits or whether instead these 14 lawsuits should continue to be governed by old law. To the contrary, even where the requirements 15 of subsections (a)(1)-(5) are satisfied, it is the Attorney General who decides whether a lawsuit 16 should be governed by the law as it existed before section 802 was enacted or whether to repeal 17 pre-existing law that would otherwise apply to that particular lawsuit.

18 Section 802’s grant of authority to the Attorney General, like Congress’ grant of authority 19 to the President in Clinton, is plenary and unlimited. Just as the President could decide to amend an 20 appropriations bill on an appropriation-by-appropriation basis, the Attorney General may amend 21 the substantive law governing surveillance on a lawsuit-by-lawsuit basis. The government and the 22 carriers were correct the first time: “Nothing in the Act requires the Attorney General to exercise 23 his discretion to make the authorized certifications.” Joint Case Mgmt. Stmt. (Dkt. 466) at 22, n.16.
24 It is the Attorney General who has the power to change the law.¹¹

25 _____
26 ¹¹ Nor is section 802 simply a statute “whose application depends on the existence of certain 27 facts.” Carriers’ Br. at 11:2-3. Even when the facts necessary for subsections (a)(1)-(5) exist, the 28 law that applies remains the law previously enacted by Congress unless and until the Attorney General exercises his power to change the law and make section 802 apply. Because the Attorney General need not certify even when the facts necessary for subsections (a)(1)-(5) exist, the

C. Other Statutes In Which Congress Has Unconditionally Modified Or Eliminated A Cause Of Action Are Irrelevant

The government and the carriers devote much attention to statutes in which Congress has unequivocally and unconditionally imposed a limitation upon a cause of action or eliminated a cause of action entirely. These statutes, and the cases interpreting them, have no relevance here, because section 802 is fundamentally different in the unlimited discretion it grants to the Attorney General to change the law governing these actions.

The statute prohibiting lawsuits against gun manufacturers at issue in City of New York v. Beretta, 524 F.3d 384, 395 (2d Cir. 2008), on which the government, the carriers, and the amici professors all rely, starkly illustrates the difference between statutes unconditionally modifying a cause of action and section 802. See Gov't Reply at 7; Carriers' Br. at 2, n.1; Profs. Br. at 13-14. That statute, 15 U.S.C. § 7902, provides:

(a) In general. A qualified civil liability action may not be brought in any Federal or State court.

(b) Dismissal of pending actions. A qualified civil liability action that is pending on the date of enactment of this Act shall be immediately dismissed by the court in which the action was brought or is currently pending.

Unlike section 802, section 7902 of title 15 does not grant any discretion to the Attorney General or any other executive branch official to decide whether to apply the statute in a particular lawsuit to change the law governing that lawsuit. Instead, Congress itself has "set[] forth a new legal standard to be applied to all actions." Beretta, 524 F.3d at 395 (emphasis added). In section 802, by contrast, Congress did not set forth a new legal standard to be applied to all surveillance actions, or even to a subset of those actions; the Attorney General decides for each case whether to repeal existing law and apply new law.

Congress could have easily structured section 802 as it structured section 7902 of title 15, mandating that it apply to every civil action falling within the class of cases defined by subsections (a)(1)-(5). Congress did not do so, however, and that fact fundamentally alters the separation of government is similarly incorrect when it argues that section 802 is merely a production-of-evidence statute in which Congress "has simply directed that the facts establishing the basis for the immunity be presented by the Attorney General." Gov't Reply at 11:7-9.

1 powers analysis, since Congress vested the power to choose whether to change the law in the 2 Executive rather than the Legislative branch.¹²

3 Section 802 is also fundamentally different from the statute at issue in Owens v. Republic of 4 the Sudan, 531 F.3d 884, 890 (D.C. Cir. 2008). See Carriers' Br. at 11. Owens was a nondelegation 5 case addressing a statute that waived a foreign state's sovereign immunity for terrorism-related 6 causes of action if, prior to the occurrence of the acts giving rise to the cause of action, the 7 Secretary of State had designated the foreign state a state sponsor of terrorism. Id. at 888. The 8 statute operated automatically once the Secretary of State made a terrorism designation; the waiver

9 _____
10 ¹² Other statutes on which the government and the carriers rely are similarly irrelevant because, 11 like section 7902 of title 15 and unlike section 802, they are statutes in which Congress 12 unconditionally modified or eliminated a cause of action, rather than leaving that choice to the 13 Executive. The statutes in Exhibit 1 to the carriers' brief show how section 802 differs from other 14 statutes in which Congress, and not the Executive, has modified or eliminated a cause of action.
15 They generally fall into two categories: (1) statutes that unequivocally limit or eliminate causes of 16 action that fit particular criteria, see, e.g., 10 U.S.C. § 2798 ("No civil action may be brought 17 against the United States on the basis of the content of a navigational aid prepared or disseminated 18 by the Defense Mapping Agency."); 49 U.S.C. former § 10701(f) (exempting small business from 19 undercharge suits); 15 U.S.C. §§ 6601-6617 (limiting damages claims arising from Year 2000
20 computer problems); 29 U.S.C. § 1854(d)(1) (limiting remedy to state workers' compensation laws 21 for death or injury of migrant agricultural workers), and (2) statutes of limitation or repose, see, 22 e.g., 29 U.S.C. § 252 ("No employer shall be subject to any liability or punishment ... on account of 23 the failure of such employer to pay an employee minimum wages ... for or on account of any 24 activity of any employee engaged in prior to May 14, 1947."); 29 U.S.C. § 216 ("No State ... shall 25 be liable under section 16 of the FLSA for a violation ... occurring before April 15, 1986.") The 26 Westfall Act (28 U.S.C. § 2679(b)(1)) unconditionally bars tort suits against government 27 employees; it may be invoked either by the government or by the employee (id. at §§ 2679(d)(1), 28 (d)(3)). None of these statutes empowers the Executive, as section 802 does, to modify or eliminate a cause of action.

21 The statutes in the decisions cited by the government (Gov't Reply at 8, n.7) also generally 22 fall into these two categories (statutes of limitation, statutes unequivocally precluding a specific 23 cause of action) and are distinguishable from section 802 on the same grounds. See, e.g., Fields v.
24 Legacy Health Sys., 413 F.3d 943, 955-58 (9th Cir. 2005) (statute of limitations and repose); Lyons 25 v. Agusta, 252 F.3d 1078, 1085-89 (9th Cir. 2001) (statute of repose); Ducharme v. Merrill- 26 National Lab., 574 F.2d 1307, 1310 (5th Cir. 1978) (statute precluding all challenges to 27 government's vaccination program). The Atomic Testing Liability Act at issue in In re Consol.
28 United States Atmos. Testing Litig. v. Livermore Labs, 820 F.2d 982 (9th Cir. 1987), see Gov't Reply at 9, n.8, is similar to the Westfall Act. It unconditionally bars tort suits against government contractors arising out of atomic testing, 50 U.S.C. § 2783(b); its certification procedures pertain only to removal, 50 U.S.C. § 2783(c). None of the statutes at issue in these cases grants the Executive the power to decide what law should apply in a particular lawsuit.

1 of sovereign immunity did not depend upon the Secretary of State making a submission of the 2 designation to the court and the Secretary had no discretion over whether or not the designation 3 should have jurisdictional consequences. Id.

4 As the Owens court noted (531 F.3d at 891), the statute at issue there was similar to the 5 tariff suspension statute found constitutional in Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649 6 (1892), and discussed in Plaintiffs’ Opposition at 14-17. The statute in Field was constitutional 7 because it compelled the President to suspend certain tariffs upon the occurrence of certain 8 triggering facts; once they occurred, he had no discretion whether to suspend the tariffs. “[W]hen 9 enacting the statutes discussed in Field, Congress itself made the decision to suspend or repeal the 10 particular [tariff] provisions at issue upon the occurrence of particular events subsequent to 11 enactment, and it left only the determination of whether such events occurred up to the President.”
12 Clinton, 524 U.S. at 445; see also id. at 443 (“when the President determined that the contingency 13 had arisen, he had a duty to suspend”). So, too, in Owens, Congress decided to extend jurisdiction 14 upon the occurrence of triggering events—that a foreign state “ ‘repeatedly provide[s] support for 15 acts of international terrorism’ ” (Owens, 531 F.3d at 888)—and “left only the determination of 16 whether such events occurred up to the” (Clinton, 524 U.S. at 445) Secretary of State.

17 Section 802 is different from the statute in Owens for the same reason that, as explained in 18 Plaintiffs’ Opposition at 15-18, it is different from the tariff suspension statute at issue in Field.
19 Unlike both the tariff statute of Field and the statute in Owens, section 802 does not change the law 20 automatically where the requirements of subsections 802(a)(1)-(5) are met. The change in law
21 occurs only if the Attorney General decides the law should change.¹³

22 D. Section 802 Violates The Nondelegation Doctrine By Providing No Intelligible 23 Principle To Govern The Attorney General’s Plenary Power To Change The 24 Law Governing Plaintiffs’ Actions

25 The government and the carriers again rely on a misdescription of the Attorney General’s 26 power under section 802 in making their nondelegation argument. The aspersions they cast on the

26 ¹³ Other decisions on which the carriers rely similarly involve Field-type statutes that lack any 27 element of executive discretion as to the legal consequences of events. E.g., in Currin v. Wallace, 28 306 U.S. 1, 15-16 (1939), certain tobacco-grower regulations took effect automatically upon a vote of the affected growers, without any executive discretion.

1 nondelegation doctrine cannot change the fact that they can point to no other statute giving the 2 Executive absolutely standardless discretion in deciding whether or not to terminate litigation 3 between private parties.

4 The government (Gov't Reply at 11-13) asserts that the requirements of subsections (a)(1)- 5 (5) provide "an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to [act] [i.e., the 6 Attorney General] is directed to conform." Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, 531 U.S. 457, 472 7 (2001) (internal quotation marks omitted; first bracketed material original). Subsections (a)(1)-(5), 8 however, only define the class of lawsuits in which the Attorney General may exercise his 9 discretion to change the law. Those subsections provide no guidance—no intelligible principle to 10 which the Attorney General must conform—as to whether or not the Attorney General should 11 exercise his discretion to invoke section 802 in any particular lawsuit within that class.

12 The carriers also misdescribe section 802, asserting that "Congress expressed its policy 13 judgment that no suits should lie against carriers in certain carefully defined circumstances" and 14 thereby provided the Attorney General with the required intelligible principle. Carriers' Br. at 15 13:12-13. Congress, however, expressed no such judgment in the statutory text because it did not 16 mandate or even suggest the Attorney General should exercise his power to change the law and 17 cause the dismissal of all, or any, of the lawsuits satisfying one of the requirements of 802(a).

18 Because section 802 lacks any intelligible principle telling the Attorney General under what 19 conditions he should or should not file a certification, "it [is] impossible in a proper proceeding to 20 ascertain whether the will of Congress has been obeyed." Yakus v. U.S., 321 U.S. 414, 426 (1944).
21 Section 802 accordingly violates the nondelegation doctrine.¹⁴

22 E. Section 802 Unconstitutionally Permits The Other Branches To Dictate The 23 Outcome-Determinative Facts In Individual Lawsuits

24 Notwithstanding the eagerness of the government, the carriers, and the amici professors to 25 ¹⁴ The carriers' invocation of the doctrine of prosecutorial discretion (Carrier Br. at 14) is 26 irrelevant to the nondelegation question here. A government decision not to prosecute or enforce a 27 statutory duty on a private party does not change the law governing relations between private 28 parties and works no deprivation on any private party. By contrast, the Attorney General's exercise of discretion here to file a certification does change the law governing relations between plaintiffs and the carriers and does deprive plaintiffs of their causes of action against the carriers.

1 attack U.S. v. Klein, 80 U.S. 128 (1872), plaintiffs do not rest their analysis on the Delphic 2 pronouncements of that case. Instead, as plaintiffs explained in their opposition at 20-21, 3 section 802 transgresses the clear and explicit boundaries set forth in Robertson v. Seattle Audubon
4 Society, 503 U.S. 429, 438-39 (1992) and Ecology Center v. Castaneda, 426 F.3d 1144, 1149-50 5 (9th Cir. 2005) that protect the Judiciary from intrusion by the other branches.

6 Under Robertson and Ecology Center, Congress may not “direct any particular findings of 7 fact or applications of law, old or new, to fact.” Robertson, 503 U.S. at 438; Ecology Ctr., 426 F.3d 8 at 1149-50. Section 802 violates this command because it forbids the Court from engaging in 9 independent fact-finding. Instead, it is the Attorney General, not the Court, who determines 10 whether “the statutory requirements ... are met” for dismissal. Ecology Ctr., 426 F.3d at 1149. The 11 Court must defer to the Attorney General’s findings of fact, which it may review only under the 12 “substantial evidence” standard of review. 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(b)(1). The Attorney General’s 13 certification, when coupled with the “substantial evidence” standard of review, is an 14 unconstitutional attempt to “direct ... particular findings of fact,” Robertson, 503 U.S. at 438; 15 Ecology Center, 426 F.3d at 1149-50, and thereby compel the Court to dismiss these actions.

16 The contention that the district court in Ecology Center did not engage in de novo
17 factfinding on the crucial factual issue in that case—whether the timber sales at issue preserved 18 10% of the project areas as old-growth timber—lacks merit. The Ninth Circuit expressly held that 19 the new statute at issue there was constitutional because “it is still the district court that determines 20 whether there is 10% old growth on the project areas at issue.” Ecology Ctr., 426 F.3d at 1149. The 21 district court understood its duty to determine de novo under the new statute whether 10% of the 22 project area was old growth: “The court still has the discretion [under the new statute] to determine 23 that there is not 10% on the project areas.” Ecology Ctr. v. Castaneda, No. CV-02-200-M, slip. op.
24 at 5 (D. Mont. 2004) (Carriers’ Br., Ex. 2 at 5). The district court thus was not required to defer to 25 administrative fact-finding; instead, if the district court determined de novo that the timber sales 26 preserved 10% of the project area as old growth, then as a matter of law the sales complied with 27 Congress’ new legal standard, which provided that the timber sale decisions “ ‘shall not be deemed 28 arbitrary and capricious under the NFMA, NEPA or other applicable law as long as each project

1 area retains 10 percent designated old growth.’ ” Ecology Ctr., 426 F.3d at 1147 (original emphasis 2 omitted).

3 III. Section 802 Violates Due Process

4 Due process requires more than what section 802 provides: “[D]ue process may be 5 satisfied by providing for a neutral adjudicator to ‘conduct a de novo review of all factual and legal 6 issues.’ ” Concrete Pipe & Prods. v. Constr. Laborers Pension Trust, 508 U.S. 602, 618 (1993). By 7 denying the Court the opportunity to determine the facts and law de novo, by requiring the Court to 8 base its decisions on factual and legal findings that were not the product of an adversary 9 adjudication and that were made by a biased decisionmaker, and by limiting review of the 10 correctness of those findings to application of the deferential “substantial evidence” standard of 11 review, section 802 violates due process.

12 Plaintiffs, the government, and the carriers all agree that, as explained in Plaintiffs’ 13 Opposition at 23-24, the Attorney General’s determination that one or more of the requirements of 14 subsections (a)(1)-(5) is satisfied and his decision to exercise his discretion to file a certification in 15 plaintiffs’ actions is not an adversary adjudication before an unbiased decisionmaker empowered to 16 decide facts and law de novo.¹⁵ See Gov’t Reply at 15:3-5; Carriers’ Br. at 15:6-7 & 21:16 to 22:5.
17 Nor is it disputed that plaintiffs never receive an adversary adjudication before an unbiased 18 decisionmaker empowered to decide facts and law de novo under section 802. Instead, the Court is 19 bound by the Attorney General’s factual determinations, which it may review only under the 20 deferential “substantial evidence” test.

21 The government and the carriers argue nevertheless that due process is not violated here.
22 They argue that due process is so “ ‘flexible’ ” (Gov’t Reply at 16:6-7; Carriers’ Br. at 17:6) that it
23 can be twisted into a knot restraining this Court from exercising its full powers and compelling it 24

25 ¹⁵ The Government incorrectly asserts that the Attorney General does not “otherwise make 26 findings of fact.” Gov’t Reply at 15:4-5. Whether the requirements of subsections (a)(1)-(5) are 27 satisfied presents factual questions, and the Attorney General’s certification under any of those 28 subsections necessarily makes factual findings. For example, the Attorney General asserts in his certification that “there was no such alleged content-dragnet” and that “no provider participated in that alleged activity.” Attorney General’s Certification (Dkt. 469-3) at 5:18-19.

1 instead to issue a judgment based on facts that have never been determined de novo in an adversary
2 proceeding before an unbiased adjudicator.¹⁶

3 In a bid to salvage section 802, the government and the carriers obscure the nature of the 4 Court's inquiry under the "substantial evidence" test. Seeking to suggest that this inquiry is not a 5 review of the Attorney General's determination that the factual and legal requirements for 6 certification are satisfied but a de novo inquiry into whether those requirements are satisfied, the 7 government describes the Attorney General's role as only "to present the information necessary for 8 the Court to make a determination under the Act." Gov't Reply at 15:15-17. The carriers in turn 9 assert that the Court "make[s] a meaningful independent assessment of the facts at issue" (Carriers' 10 Br. at 17:15), "that the Court independently review[s] the evidence presented to it" (id. at 17:22), 11 and that "this Court ... adjudicates whether the requirements of § 802 are met" (id. at 17:19).

12 _____
13 ¹⁶ The government and the carriers do not dispute that plaintiffs have a fundamental liberty 14 interest in their right to be free from unconstitutional surveillance. The carriers contend (Carriers' 15 Br. at 19:22-24), however, that plaintiffs' liberty interests are not at stake here because plaintiffs 16 could seek relief against the government. This contention ignores that plaintiffs are entitled to 17 protect their liberty interests by seeking relief against those who are the direct and immediate cause 18 of their deprivation, i.e., the carriers.

19 The government and the carriers, while denigrating plaintiffs' property interest in their 20 causes of action as "inchoate" (Carriers' Br. at 19:20) and not "vested" (Gov't Reply at 14, n.12), 21 appear to concede that it is indeed a property interest protected by due process. "[A] cause of action 22 is a species of property protected by the ... Due Process Clause." Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 23 455 U.S. 422, 428 (1982); accord, Tulsa Prof'l Collection Services, Inc. v. Pope, 485 U.S. 478, 24 485 (1988) ("[i]n Logan, the Court held that a cause of action under Illinois' Fair Employment 25 Practices Act was a protected property interest"); Fields v. Legacy Health Sys., 413 F.3d 943, 956 26 (9th Cir. 2005) ("Causes of action are a species of property protected by the Fourteenth 27 Amendment's Due Process Clause."); Atmos. Testing Litig., 820 F.2d at 989 ("a cause of action has 28 been recognized as a species of property protected by the ... due process clause"). Grimesy v. Huff, 876 F.2d 738, 743 44 (9th Cir. 1989), was a takings case, not a due process case. Whether a cause of action has become a vested final judgment does not matter for a due process claim. See Atmos.
Testing Litig., 820 F.2d at 988-90 (Takings Clause did not apply to cause of action that had not been reduced to final judgment, but Due Process Clause did apply).

The related assertion that "the government [is] 'free to create substantive defenses or immunities'" (Gov't Reply at 13:20 to 14:2, emphasis added) overstates the law. As explained in Plaintiffs' Opposition at 31, n.7, only Congress, not the Executive, is free to create defenses or immunities to statutory causes of action because it is "the legislative determination [that] provides all the process that is due." Logan, 455 U.S. at 430 (emphasis added). Here, however, the Attorney General, and not Congress, is changing the law governing plaintiffs' lawsuits; thus, there is no
"legislative determination" that could satisfy due process.

1 The government and the carriers ignore the fundamental difference between a judicial 2 inquiry that finds facts and applies law to facts de novo, and a judicial inquiry that reviews
3 someone else’s findings of fact and applications of law to fact. This Court’s role under section 802
4 is the latter, not the former. Section 802(b) only permits this Court to review whether substantial 5 evidence supports the Attorney General’s determination that the requirements of one or more of 6 subsections (a)(1)-(5) are satisfied and prohibits the Court from making a de novo determination of 7 whether any of those requirements are satisfied: “A certification under subsection (a) shall be 8 given effect unless the court finds that such certification is not supported by substantial evidence 9” 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(b)(1) (for emphasis, Congress entitled subsection (b) “Judicial Review” and 10 subsection (b)(1) “Review of Certifications”). The lulling assurances and artfully inaccurate 11 descriptions deployed by the government and the carriers cannot conceal that under section 802(b) 12 the Court reviews only whether the Attorney General’s determinations are supported by substantial 13 evidence and is prohibited from independently determining the facts.¹⁷

14 Nor is the substantial evidence review dictated by section 802 analogous to situations in 15 which a court defers as an evidentiary matter to testimony of government officials on national 16 security issues. Carriers’ Br. at 18:1-9. Such deference at most amounts to an evidentiary 17 presumption applied by a trier of fact, which is a far different matter than the review of another 18 decisionmaker’s decision under the “substantial evidence” standard. Under an evidentiary 19 presumption, the trier of fact is still weighing the evidence and finding the facts de novo. Under the 20

21 ¹⁷ As used in section 802, the term “substantial evidence” is a standard of review, for it 22 describes the standard the Court employs in testing the determinations made by the Attorney 23 General. In a bit of confusion-making, the carriers cite to Steadman v. S.E.C., 450 U.S. 91 (1981), 24 to suggest that section 802 uses “substantial evidence” to mean a standard of proof and not a 25 standard of review, implying that under section 802 the Court is not reviewing the findings made 26 by the Attorney General in his certification but is making a de novo determination of whether the 27 requirements of section 802 are met. Carriers’ Br. at 17, n.25. Steadman addressed the 28 Administrative Procedure Act’s (“APA”) two different uses of the term “substantial evidence:” in section 7(c) as a “standard of proof” equivalent to “the traditional preponderance-of-the-evidence standard” (450 U.S. at 102) for a decisionmaker weighing the evidence and making an initial de novo determination of fact; and in section 10(e) as a standard of judicial review (id. at 99-100 & n.20). In section 802, “substantial evidence” is used in the latter sense as the standard of review by which the Court reviews the decision of a different decisionmaker, the Attorney General.

1 “substantial evidence” standard of review, how the reviewing court might have weighed the 2 evidence and decided the issue as an initial matter is beside the point; the question instead is 3 whether the decision made by someone else has “ ‘more than a mere scintilla but less than a 4 preponderance’ ” of evidence supporting it. Ryan v. Comm’r of Soc. Sec., 528 F.3d 1194, 1198 (9th 5 Cir. 2008). Section 802 requires this Court to uphold the Attorney General’s determination even 6 though it is not supported by a preponderance of the evidence and “even though the court would 7 justifiably have made a different choice had the matter been before it de novo.” Universal Camera
8 Corp. v. N.L.R.B., 340 U.S. 474, 488 (1951).¹⁸

9 The Attorney General’s bias in making the determinations that bind the Court under the 10 “substantial evidence” standard of review further aggravates the denial of due process here.
11 Relying on “decisionmaker policy statement” cases like Hortonville Jt. Sch. Dist. No. 1 v.
12 Hortonville Educ. Ass’n, 426 U.S. 482, 493 (1976), the government and the carriers argue that the 13 Attorney General is not a biased fact-finder and that his statements relating to this litigation were 14 merely abstract and general “position[s] ... on a policy issue related to [a] dispute,” id., divorced 15 from the particular circumstances of plaintiffs’ lawsuits.

16 The Attorney General did far more than just opine on an abstract or theoretical policy 17 question of liability for unlawful surveillance. Before the enactment of section 802 and before he 18 engaged in the process that led to his certification, he repeatedly asserted that this Court should

20 ¹⁸ The government and the carriers also make a different national-security-deference argument, 21 asserting that “substantial evidence” review “is consistent with” judicial deference to the 22 Executive’s judgment under the state secrets privilege that evidence should be excluded because its 23 disclosure may harm national security. Gov’t Reply at 16:12 to 17:3; Carriers’ Br. at 18:11-18.
24 This argument makes no sense in the context of section 802, for two reasons. First, none of the 25 requirements of subsections (a)(1)-(5) has as one of its elements the potential harm to national 26 security from litigating plaintiffs’ claims, and thus no such assertion of harm is at issue in this 27 Court’s substantial evidence review. Second, this Court’s substantial evidence review requires that 28 the Attorney General submit and the Court review information about intelligence sources and methods in order to determine whether the requirements of one or more of subsections (a)(1)-(5) is satisfied. It is thus significantly different from the state secrets privilege where, when the privilege is successfully asserted, such information is not submitted to the court and the court does not make any decision based on the contents of such information. Because this Court has already seen all the evidence provided by the government, there is no national security reason, nor any other legitimate reason, for the court to defer to the factual assertions of the Attorney General.

1 dismiss the very lawsuits that are the subject of the government’s motion. Referring specifically to 2 plaintiffs’ lawsuits here, he stated: “It is unfair to force such companies [i.e., the carrier defendants 3 here] to face the possibility of massive judgments and litigation costs” (Summary at 60); 4 “immunity [is] a fair and just result. ... it makes no sense to allow this litigation [i.e., plaintiffs’
5 lawsuits] to go forward” (id.); “providing liability protection to those companies sued [by plaintiffs 6 here] for answering their country’s call for assistance in the aftermath of September 11 is simply 7 the right thing to do” (id.); allowing plaintiffs’ lawsuits to proceed to an adjudication on the merits 8 “is unacceptable” (id.); and “[I]liability protection is the fair and just result and is necessary to 9 ensure the continued assistance of the private sector” (id. at 61). In addition, the Attorney General 10 prejudged the facts, saying in December 2007 that “the companies ... relied on written assurances 11 that the President himself authorized the activities and that high-level Government officials had 12 determined the activities to be lawful.” Opsahl Decl., Ex. 72, p. 1685. These statements are 13 indisputable evidence that the Attorney General prejudged and predetermined the outcome of the 14 certification process before he began it and therefore was actually biased when he conducted it.¹⁹

15 Finally, the carriers’ argument that section 802’s nondisclosure provisions do not violate 16 due process “because these provisions deprive plaintiffs of nothing to which they would otherwise 17 have been entitled” (Carriers’ Br. at 26:2-3) is as arrogant as it is meritless. As explained in 18 Plaintiffs’ Opposition at 27-30, before plaintiffs’ claims involving the fundamental privacy rights 19 of millions of Americans can be dismissed, due process entitles plaintiffs to meaningful notice of 20 the “relevant supporting evidence,” Brock v. Roadway Express, Inc., 481 U.S. 252, 264 (1987), for 21 without meaningful notice the opportunity to be heard in opposition to the government’s motion 22 also is not meaningful. Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254, 270 (1970) (“ ‘the evidence used to prove 23 the Government’s case must be disclosed to the individual so that he has an opportunity to show

24 ¹⁹ Nor does Withrow v. Larkin, 421 U.S. 35, 48 (1975), support the contention that the Attorney 25 General is not institutionally and structurally biased. The essence of that decision is that an 26 adversary hearing at which the parties are free to present evidence and argument to the 27 decisionmaker will overcome any preconceptions that the decisionmaker has formed by conducting 28 an ex parte prehearing investigation. Here, of course, the Attorney General conducted ex parte all of his investigation leading up to his certification decision, and plaintiffs never had the opportunity to participate in an adversary adjudication before him.

1 that it is untrue’ ”); accord, Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 507, 533 (2004).

2 That right to notice and an opportunity to contest extends to the core issue under 3 section 802(b): whether substantial evidence supports the Attorney General’s certification.
4 Although section 802(d) purports to provide notice and opportunity to be heard by “permitt[ing 5 plaintiffs] to participate in the briefing or argument,” the nondisclosure provisions of 6 sections 802(c) and (d) deprive plaintiffs of their right to a fair hearing by keeping plaintiffs blind 7 as to any evidence supporting such certification. If kept in ignorance of the adversary’s evidence, a 8 party’s right to a hearing is “but a barren one.” Morgan v. U.S., 304 U.S. 1, 18 (1938). Sections 9 802(c) and (d) thus set up a sham proceeding that provides the semblance of a fair hearing but not 10 the substance.

11 Likewise unconvincing is the carriers’ argument that plaintiffs’ interest in this litigation 12 “does not compare with” the interest of plaintiffs in American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm. v.
13 Reno, 70 F.3d 1045, 1068-70 (9th Cir. 1995). Carriers’ Br. at 26:15. The Ninth Circuit’s 14 reasoning—that “ ‘fairness can rarely be obtained by secret, one-sided determination of facts 15 decisive of rights,’ ” id. at 1069 (quoting Joint Anti-Fascist Comm. v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123, 170 16 (1951) (Frankfurter, J.))—applies at least as strongly against the government’s use of secret 17 information here through section 802’s nondisclosure provisions to deprive millions of American 18 citizens of their fundamental privacy rights as it did against the government’s use of secret 19 evidence against the alien plaintiffs in American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee.

20 Due process is violated not only by the sham proceeding created by section 802, which 21 invites plaintiffs to argue whether evidence they are barred from seeing supports the certification, 22 but also by the gag provision of section 802(c)(2) preventing this Court from issuing a public order 23 setting forth the reasons and evidence upon which the Court finds the certification is or is not 24 supported by substantial evidence. Lynn v. Regents of Univ. of Cal., 656 F.2d 1337, 1346 (9th Cir.
25 1981) (decision based on ex parte evidence offends “principles of due process upon which our 26 judicial system depends to resolve disputes fairly and accurately”). The carriers’ Alice-in-27 Wonderland logic that a secret order is the consequence that “necessarily follows” (Carriers’ Br. at 28 27:5) from a secret ex parte, in camera proceeding that denies plaintiffs meaningful notice and a

1 meaningful opportunity to be heard only demonstrates how fundamentally flawed section 802 is.

2 The carriers' final argument, that if section 802's nondisclosure requirements violate due 3 process then therefore "the proper resolution would be dismissal of Plaintiffs' claims," is another 4 absurd non sequitur. Carriers' Br. at 27:15-16. The carriers cite no case—and there is none—that 5 they have a due process right to have the government use secret evidence on their behalf as a sword 6 to kill plaintiffs' claims, which seek to redress the most widespread violation in history of the 7 privacy rights of American citizens.²⁰

8 IV. The Secrecy Provisions Of Section 802 Are Unconstitutional

9 The Third, Fourth, Sixth, and Seventh Circuits have all held that there is a presumptive First 10 Amendment right of public access to civil trials and/or dispositive civil pretrial proceedings, 11 including a right of access to documents the parties submit or the court relies upon in adjudicating 12 a case. See Pl. Opp. at 32:13-25; Westmoreland v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 752 F.2d 16, 23 (2d 13 Cir. 1984) (First Amendment secures to public and press right of access to civil proceedings); 14 Assoc. Press v. U.S. Dist. Ct., 705 F.2d 1143, 1145 (9th Cir. 1983) ("no reason to distinguish 15 between pretrial proceedings and the documents filed in regard to them").²¹ This right applies to 16 the court's own opinion resolving a disputed motion. Grove Fresh Distrib. v. Everfresh Juice Co., 17 24 F.3d 893, 898 (7th Cir. 1994) (presumptive right of access "to judicial decisions and the 18 documents which comprise the bases of those decisions."). Neither the carriers nor the government 19

21 ²⁰ The carriers are also incorrect in arguing that plaintiffs have no standing to challenge the 22 substantial evidence standard because "[p]laintiffs cannot show that the Attorney General's 23 certification would be rejected under some other standard." Carriers' Br. at 16:24-25. The 24 government has moved for summary judgment. Summary judgment should not be granted if there 25 remains a genuine dispute of material fact. Both the carriers and the government dispute the facts 26 in plaintiffs' Summary, and those facts are a sufficient basis to support a judgment in plaintiffs' 27 favor if the Court were reviewing de novo the question of whether the requirements of any of 28 subsections (a)(1)-(5) were satisfied in these lawsuits.

21 ²¹ Plaintiffs have standing to assert this First Amendment right. First, three of the plaintiffs in 26 this litigation are journalists. See Campbell v. AT&T Communications of Cal., Case No. C-06-3596
27 VRW, Complaint ¶¶ 9, 11, 14 (Plaintiffs Sussman, Cooper, and Scheer). Second, section 802(d) 28 explicitly gives plaintiffs the right "to participate in the briefing or argument of any legal issue."
Moreover, the media intervenors are joining in plaintiffs' briefing on this issue (Dkt. 523).

1 has cited a case holding otherwise.²² Nevertheless, they argue that courts must engage in a 2 Richmond Newspapers/Press-Enterprise analysis with respect to each particular species of 3 dispositive motion or each particular type of information that is contained in the document that a 4 party seeks to hide from public view. Carriers' Br. at 28:6-11.

5 The Supreme Court authoritatively rejected that argument in Globe Newspaper Co. v.
6 Super. Ct., 457 U.S. 596, 605 n.13 (1982). In Globe, Massachusetts argued there was no First 7 Amendment right of public access to the trial testimony of minor sex victims because such 8 testimony was not historically open to the public. The Court explained that the argument there, as 9 here, missed the point:

10 Whether the First Amendment right of access to criminal trials can be restricted in 11 the context of any particular criminal trial, such as a murder trial (the setting for the 12 dispute in Richmond Newspapers) or a rape trial, depends not on the historical openness of that type of criminal trial but rather on the state interests assertedly supporting the restriction.

13 Id. (emphasis added). Thus the issue is not whether the First Amendment right of access exists but 14 whether, on the facts of a particular case, that presumptive right is overcome by a showing that the 15 restriction in question satisfies strict scrutiny. See Globe, 457 U.S. at 606-07.²³

16 The cases the carriers cite all involved proceedings other than criminal or civil trials or 17 dispositive pretrial motions. See, e.g., Seattle Times Co., 845 F.2d 1513, 1516 & n.1 (9th Cir. 1988) 18 (treating detention proceedings as different from pretrial proceedings). It was only because the 19 issue had not already been decided that the courts in those cases applied the "experience and logic"

20 ²² The carriers mischaracterize plaintiffs' position as asserting a First Amendment right to 21 "force information from U.S. intelligence agencies." Carriers' Br. at 30:6-7. The First Amendment 22 applies because what plaintiffs actually seek is access to information that the government has filed 23 in support of its motion to terminate their lawsuits. See In re Motion for Release of Court Records, 24 526 F. Supp. 2d 484, 491 n.19 (FISA Ct. 2007) ("Nothing in FOIA divests federal courts of supervisory power over their own records, nor would an agency record's exemption from disclosure under FOIA necessarily displace a right of access to a copy of the same document in a court's files, especially if that right is grounded in the First Amendment.").

25 ²³ Indeed, if the law were as the carriers assert, courts would not apply strict scrutiny when 26 asked to seal allegedly trade secret documents in the context of summary judgment motions. They 27 would automatically grant a motion to seal because there is no historical tradition of access to trade 28 secrets. But courts do apply strict scrutiny to such requests. See Publicker Indus. v. Cohen, 733 F.2d 1059, 1073 (3rd Cir. 1984) (describing how strict scrutiny applies to request to bar public access to safeguard a trade secret); Order (Hepting Dkt. 346) at 6.

1 analysis (see Press Enterprise Co. v. Super. Ct., 478 U.S. 1, 9 (1986)) to determine whether there 2 was a First Amendment right of access.²⁴ Although the grounds for the government’s motion in 3 this case may be new, the context is still the familiar motion to dismiss and/or for summary 4 judgment to which the First Amendment right of access applies.

5 Before the First Amendment right of public access may be abridged, “it must be shown 6 that the denial is necessitated by a compelling governmental interest, and is narrowly tailored to 7 serve that interest.” Globe, 457 U.S. at 606-07; Pl. Opp. at 33:5-10.²⁵ That showing must be made 8 with specificity. Publicker Indus. v. Cohen, 733 F.2d 1059, 1071 (3d Cir. 1984).

9 Section 802(c)’s blanket non-disclosure rule serves no compelling governmental interest 10 because it does not require that there be an actual national security threat in any particular case.
11 Non-disclosure is automatically required upon the Attorney General’s unsupported assertion of 12 such a threat.²⁶ Strict scrutiny requires the Attorney General to substantiate national security harm 13 in each case; the court must then evaluate the merits of the claim. Globe, 457 U.S. at 607-08 (“[A]s 14 compelling as that interest [in protecting minor victims] is, it does not justify a mandatory closure 15 rule, for it is clear that the circumstances of the particular case may affect the significance of the 16 interest.”); id. at 608 n.20; In re Washington Post, 807 F.2d 383, 391-92 (4th Cir. 1986) (noting

25 connection with detention hearing); In re Motion for Release of Court Records, 526 F. Supp. 2d 26 484, 492 (FISA Ct. 2007) (court orders and government filings re FISA surveillance 27 authorizations).

28 ²⁵ The carriers are simply wrong when they assert that plaintiffs must demonstrate the absence of a compelling interest, Carriers’ Br. at 29:4-6; it is the Attorney General’s burden to demonstrate the presence of a compelling interest. See Globe, 457 U.S. at 606-07; Rushford v. New Yorker Magazine, Inc., 846 F.2d 249, 253 (4th Cir. 1988).

²⁶ The provision also violates Article III of the Constitution, because it is the Attorney General who controls whether material will be withheld from the public, rather than the Court, applying the standards required by the First Amendment. See Pl. Opp. at 34:25-28.

1 by-case” determination made in secret by the Attorney General without any court review conflicts 2 with the First Amendment).²⁷ The blanket non-disclosure rule of section 802(c) and (d) cannot 3 stand in the face of Globe.²⁸

4 Contrary to the carriers’ argument, plaintiffs’ challenge to section 802(c)’s perpetual ban on 5 disclosure is anything but “hypothetical.” See Carriers’ Br. at 29:8-17. Under the statute, the mere 6 assertion of harm to the national security triggers the non-disclosure provision, as it has here. The 7 statute provides no mechanism for the plaintiffs to challenge the validity of the assertion, or for the 8 Court to evaluate the assertion. Nor does it provide any mechanism whereby the Attorney General 9 must return to the Court on a regular basis to justify the continued secrecy of the information.
10 Because the perpetual ban is not narrowly tailored to further the government’s asserted national 11 security interest, it violates the First Amendment. See Pl. Opp. at 35:1-36:8.

12 Finally, this challenge to section 802(c) and (d) is ripe. It is the government’s burden to 13 show that the statute is narrowly tailored to satisfy a compelling state interest. See n.25, supra.
14 Congress’ failure to incorporate any time limitation into the non-disclosure provision relates 15 directly to the narrow tailoring question. It was the permanent nature of 18 U.S.C. § 2709’s gag 16 order provision that led the Doe courts to conclude that the measure was not narrowly tailored. See 17 Doe v. Ashcroft, 334 F. Supp. 2d 471, 520-21 (S.D.N.Y. 2004); Doe v. Gonzales, 386 F. Supp. 2d 18 66, 79-80 (D. Conn. 2005), after amendment of non-disclosure statute vacated and remanded and 19 dismissed as moot, respectively, by Doe v. Gonzales, 449 F.3d 415 (2d Cir. 2006).²⁹

20 _____
21 ²⁷ The carriers’ reliance on U.S. v. Aref, 533 F.3d 72 (2d Cir. 2008), and Kasza v. Whitman, 325
22 F.3d 1178 (9th Cir. 2003), is misplaced. In neither case did the court accept the government’s 23 national security claims at face value. Rather, each court itself determined whether revealing the classified material would jeopardize national security. Aref, 533 F.3d at 82-83; Kasza, 325 F.3d at 1180; see also Kasza v. Browner, 133 F.3d 1159 (9th Cir. 1998); U.S. v. Moussaoui, 65 Fed. Appx.
881, 886-87 (4th Cir. 2003).

24 ²⁸ The carriers mistakenly argue that section 802 is not a blanket rule. Carriers’ Br. at 30:18:21.
25 Just as the statute in Globe applied whenever an underage victim testified, section 802(c) applies 26 whenever the Attorney General makes a section 802(c) declaration. That the triggering event is an Attorney General’s decision to invoke national security rather than a prosecutor’s decision to call 27 the victim as a witness is a distinction without a difference. As for section 802(d), it applies automatically without any invocation by the Attorney General.

28 ²⁹ The carriers incorrectly contend that Doe v. Gonzales, 386 F. Supp. 2d 66, and Doe v.
Ashcroft, 334 F. Supp. 2d 471, are inapposite, arguing that, because section 802(c) and (d) do not

1 V. The Court May Consider Plaintiffs' Evidence

2 Section 802 requires the Court to consider all the evidence necessary to determine if the 3 Attorney General has met his substantial evidence burden, including all evidence submitted by the 4 parties for purposes of this motion. 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(b)(1). Indeed, the Court can require the 5 Attorney General to submit any relevant evidence, even classified evidence. See 50 U.S.C.
 6 § 1885a(d) (“To the extent that classified information is relevant to the proceeding ... the court 7 shall review such information in camera and ex parte” (emphasis added)).

8 The government nevertheless asserts that section 802 “plainly does not contemplate the 9 submission and review of other materials through the creation of a new record submitted into 10 evidence in the district court.” Gov’t Reply at 25:13-16. Its position seems to be that the Court’s 11 review is limited to the Attorney General’s certification and to materials falling within its narrow 12 interpretation of the statutory term “supplemental materials:” “any order, certification, directive, or 13 written request submitted by the parties,” id. (citing section 802(b)), i.e., only the documentation 14 requesting the surveillance given to the carriers.

15 Yet if the government is correct that the only evidence the Court can consider is the 16 certification and the documentation requesting the surveillance, then it cannot meet its “substantial 17 evidence” burden under the statute. For example, the documentation given to the carriers cannot 18 demonstrate that the carriers “did not provide the alleged assistance” as required for a subsection 19 (a)(5) certification. Similarly, reliance solely on the certification and the documentation requesting 20 the surveillance cannot demonstrate whether the “assistance by that person was provided pursuant 21 to” the documentation, nor whether the warrantless surveillance program was or was not “designed 22 to” prevent a terrorist attack on the United States. It would make no sense to place a “substantial

24 restrict speech, there is “no ... First Amendment problem.” Carriers’ Br. at 29:4-30:7. Globe and 25 its progeny demonstrate that the provisions do implicate the First Amendment right of access to 26 documents in dispositive pretrial proceedings in civil actions. Because restrictions on access to 27 such documents are subject to strict scrutiny, Pl. Opp. at 32:5-10, the party seeking to justify those 28 restrictions bears the same burden as the government does when it seeks to justify a prior restraint.
See, e.g., Levine v. U.S. Dist. Court, 764 F.2d 590, 595 (9th Cir. 1985) (prior restraints subject to strict scrutiny). Thus, the Doe cases, holding that the permanent non-disclosure provision of 18 U.S.C. § 2709 failed strict scrutiny, are directly on point.

1 evidence” burden on the government and then limit the ability to present evidence to only the 2 documentation requesting the surveillance while forbidding the court from considering evidence 3 about the type and scope of surveillance that was actually conducted.

4 The differences between the statute’s language in subsections 802(b) and (c) support the 5 conclusion that additional evidence is permitted. Section 802(c) addresses only some of the 6 evidence that may be submitted pursuant to section 802(b). Specifically, it restricts “disclosure of a 7 certification made pursuant to subsection (a) or the supplemental materials provided pursuant to 8 subsection (b) or (d) [that the Attorney General has declared] would harm the national security of 9 the United States.” 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(c) (emphasis added). By contrast, section 802(b) refers to 10 “substantial evidence provided to the court pursuant to this section [i.e., section 802 in its 11 entirety].” 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(b) (emphasis added). “[W]here Congress includes particular 12 language in one section of a statute but omits it in another ..., it is generally presumed that 13 Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion.” Keene Corp. v.
14 U.S., 508 U.S. 200, 208 (1993). Thus, section 802(c)’s reference to only the certification and the 15 supplemental materials is narrower than the broader reference in section 802(b) to “evidence 16 provided to the court.” Under the statute, therefore, the parties may submit evidence beyond the 17 supplemental materials.³⁰

18 Section 802(b), both by adopting the substantial evidence test and by instructing the Court 19 that it must decide whether the “certification is not supported by substantial evidence provided to 20 the court pursuant to this section,” contemplates that the parties will submit evidence and the Court 21 will decide whether, in light of all the evidence, the admissible evidence weighing in favor of the 22 certification satisfies the substantial evidence test. Section 802(b) cannot be construed to allow the 23 Attorney General to provide unlimited material, but deny the parties the right to participate 24 meaningfully by submitting their own contrary or different evidence.³¹

25 _____
26 ³⁰ The carriers agree that plaintiffs may submit evidence. Carriers’ Br. at 17, n.24 (quoting Sen.
Rockefeller’s statement that “[w]hatever it is they want to submit, they can submit.”).

27 ³¹ The government confuses a number of issues when it asserts that the APA does not apply and 28 that, even if the APA did apply, it would limit the evidence that the Court may consider in applying the “substantial evidence” test. Gov’t Reply at 27:3-17. First, as explained in the text, section 802

A. Plaintiffs Have Provided Admissible Evidence

1 Plaintiffs have submitted declarations of carrier employees, undisputed expert testimony, 2 sworn testimony of government officials and official statements, letters and transcripts published 3 by the government, among other evidence. Although neither the government nor the carriers made 4 formal evidentiary objections, each has suggested the hearsay rule might apply to all of plaintiffs'
5 evidence. See, e.g., Gov't Reply at 26:2-3.³²

7 The government has failed to object to plaintiffs' evidence with adequate specificity, so its 8 objection should be overruled. The party moving to exclude evidence carries the burden of making 9 a timely and specific objection. Fed. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); Burch v. Regents of Univ. of Calif., 433 F.
10 Supp. 2d 1110, 1124 (E.D. Cal. 2006) (citation omitted). If the moving party fails to identify what 11 aspects of testimony lack proper foundation or constitute inadmissible hearsay, merely alleging in a 12 conclusory manner that the testimony is inadmissible, the objection lacks specificity. U.S. v.
13 Decoud, 456 F.3d 996, 1012 (9th Cir. 2006). Similarly, where a party generally moves "to strike all 14 of Plaintiffs' Exhibits that are not self authenticating" without specifying which of the plaintiffs' 15 numerous exhibits it claimed were inadmissible for this reason, the objection is properly overruled.
16 Burch, 433 F. Supp. 2d at 1123-24; see also S.E.C. v. Merrill Scott & Associates, Ltd., 505 F. Supp.
17 2d 1193, 1200 (D. Utah 2007) (refusing to consider "blanket objection"). Here, the government's 18 evidentiary objection is a blanket objection, no more specific than the improper, over-general ones 19 in Burch, Decoud, and Merrill Scott.

21 authorizes the plaintiffs to submit additional evidence to the Court for consideration in applying the 22 "substantial evidence" test, and does not restrict that test to the evidence submitted by the Attorney 23 General. Second, the "substantial evidence" test is not peculiar to APA review of agency decisions, 24 but is widely applied and is commonly understood to require review of all relevant evidence, which 25 here includes both all the relevant evidence submitted to the Court in support of and opposition to 26 this motion, and all the evidence that was before the Attorney General in making his certification 27 decision. See Plaintiffs' Opp. at 36-39. Third, plaintiffs do not argue that APA review applies "in 28 lieu of Section 802" (Gov't Reply at 27:11-12) but instead that, as the default review for all administrative decisionmaking, the APA provides a separate layer of review that the government must satisfy in addition to section 802. See Plaintiffs' Opp. at 36-39.

³² The government does not dispute that the declarations of Mark Klein (Hepting Dkt. 31), James Russell (Hepting Dkt. 41) or J. Scott Marcus (Hepting Dkt. 32) are not hearsay. Gov't Reply at 26, n.22. These declarations alone are enough to show a genuine dispute of material fact.

1 Moreover, the government’s vague accusations of hearsay are incorrect. The statements by 2 the carriers are not hearsay because they are admissions by party-opponents, as are the statements
3 by the government co-conspirators of the carriers. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). The government 4 suggests that at least some of the witnesses quoted in the Summary may be exempted from 5 testifying at trial pursuant to its claims of privilege. Gov’t Reply at 33:1-5 and n.30. To the extent 6 that the Court subsequently agrees with the privilege claim, those witnesses would be unavailable, 7 and therefore all of their statements against interest would be admissible as exceptions to the 8 hearsay rule.³³ Fed. R. Evid. 804(a)(1) & (b)(3).

9 Finally, hearsay evidence inadmissible under the rules discussed above can be admissible 10 under the residual exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 807. Rule 807 allows the court to 11 consider evidence where there are “equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness” and:

12 (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more 13 probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the 14 proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence.

15 Id. While the government has not identified specific statements that it contests, it would be 16 surprising if the government did not at least admit that statements made to Congress are 17 appropriately trustworthy. See 18 U.S.C. § 1001. If the government asserts that the other statements 18 by Members of Congress, government officials or the carriers, including those quoted in news 19 reports, are not trustworthy, it should say so specifically so that plaintiffs can respond.

20 While statements in the Summary and its exhibits are offered as evidence of material facts, 21 given the extreme efforts of the government and the carriers to conceal relevant evidence and the 22 Court’s prohibition of discovery, plaintiffs cannot provide more probative evidence through 23 reasonable effort until they are allowed discovery. Before the claims of millions of Americans are 24 dismissed, the interests of the rules of evidence and of justice require consideration of all the

25 _____
26 ³³ At this time, no witnesses have been “exempted by ruling of the court.” The parties can brief 27 whether the state secret privilege applies, whether FISA preempts the privilege and whether the 28 government has waived the privilege when those issues are before the Court on an appropriate motion. Plaintiffs note that the Summary shows that the purported secret is not secret, and that plaintiffs are aggrieved persons for purposes of 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f).

1 relevant evidence cited in the Summary.

2 The government also asserts that the Summary is “pure speculation.” (Gov’t Reply at 2:17-3 18). Plaintiffs disagree, but it is no matter. In a summary judgment motion all inferences from the 4 evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving parties, and plaintiffs’
5 “version of any disputed issue of fact thus is presumed correct.” Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image
6 Tech. Serv., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 456 (1992); see also T.W. Elec. Serv. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors
7 Ass’n, 809 F.2d 626, 631 (9th Cir. 1987) (“Inferences may be drawn from underlying facts that are 8 not in dispute, such as background or contextual facts ... and from underlying facts on which there 9 is conflicting direct evidence....” (citations omitted)); Gordon v. Kidd, 971 F.2d 1087, 1093 (4th 10 Cir. 1992) (summary judgment inappropriate even where the dispute is only as to the conclusions 11 to be drawn from the undisputed facts).

12 B. Plaintiffs Need Not Provide Evidence Admissible At Trial At This Stage

13 “At the summary judgment stage, we do not focus on the admissibility of the evidence’s 14 form. We instead focus on the admissibility of its contents.” Fraser v. Goodale, 342 F.3d 1032, 15 1036 (9th Cir. 2003).³⁴ The primary case the government cites in support of its Rule 56(e) 16 argument is Twardowski v. American Airlines, 535 F.3d 952, 961 (9th Cir. 2008), in which the 17 court rejected a newspaper article as hearsay. In that case the court affirmed the summary judgment 18 in part because this Court “permitted broad discovery into the [defendant’s] actual practices 19 Beyond this, discovery would be unlikely to produce any probative evidence.” Id. at 961-962.
20 Here, by contrast, plaintiffs have not been permitted to conduct any discovery, let alone “broad 21 discovery.”

22 Moreover, nothing in section 802 changes the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, including 23 plaintiffs’ right to discovery under both Rules 26 and 56. See U.S. v. Fausto, 484 U.S. 439, 453
24 (1988) (It “can be strongly presumed that Congress will specifically address language on the statute 25 books that it wishes to change.”). Section 802(h) states that “[n]othing in this section shall be 26 ³⁴ The government’s attempt to distinguish Fraser (Gov’t Reply at 26, n.23) is unavailing.

27 Fraser does not limit its rule only to cases where it is the affiant’s testimony that would make the 28 evidence admissible at trial. Like the author of the diary in Fraser, those with personal knowledge of the statements in the Summary could testify to those statements at trial.

1 construed to limit any otherwise available immunity, privilege, or defense under any other 2 provision of law.” 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(h). Thus, section 802 preserves plaintiffs’ privileges under 3 the Federal Rules.

4 Exceptions “to the demand for every man’s evidence are not lightly created nor expansively 5 construed, for they are in derogation of the search for the truth.” U.S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 710 6 (1974). Indeed, the district courts have “the latitude to control any discovery process which may be 7 instituted so as to balance respondent’s need for access to proof which would support a colorable 8 constitutional claim against the extraordinary needs of the [government] for confidentiality and the 9 protection of its [intelligence] methods, sources, and mission.” Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592, 604 10 (1988). Furthermore, the Federal Rules strongly favor full discovery: “Parties may obtain discovery 11 regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending 12 action.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

13 Rule 56(f) provides that to the extent that plaintiffs “cannot present facts essential to justify 14 its opposition, the court may: (1) deny the motion; (2) order a continuance to enable affidavits to be 15 obtained, depositions to be taken, or other discovery to be undertaken; or (3) issue any other just 16 order.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f). A Rule 56(f) application must be granted where, as here, a plaintiff 17 makes “a timely application which specifically identifies relevant information, and where there is 18 some basis for believing that the information sought actually exists.” Church of Scientology of San 19 Francisco v. I.R.S., 991 F.2d 560, 562 (9th Cir. 1993); see also Clark v. Capital Credit & 20 Collection Serv., Inc., 460 F.3d 1162, 1178-79 (9th Cir. 2006) (district courts required to resolve 21 discovery issues before granting summary judgment).

22 The Cohn Declaration sets forth discovery that could lead to critical facts, including the 23 discovery necessary “to address any claims that any of the information in [the Summary] requires 24 authentication, is hearsay or is otherwise inadmissible.” Cohn Decl. (Dkt. 478), ¶ 9. The 25 government asserts Rule 56(f) is nevertheless inapplicable, arguing that “Plaintiffs have not and 26 cannot make” a showing that the evidence plaintiffs seek exists. Gov’t Reply at 33:20-34:2. To the 27 contrary, the detailed Summary shows that there is a vast array of evidence already available that 28 would be material to the section 802(b) analysis, including critical evidence that is not classified,

1 see Summary at 43-44. It would be straightforward to authenticate plaintiffs’ exhibits, such as 2 hearing transcripts, press conferences, or letters, and the necessary discovery would not require any 3 purported state secrets. The evidence set forth in the Summary also demonstrates that the additional 4 information sought by the discovery outlined in the Cohn Declaration is not “ ‘almost certainly 5 nonexistent or ... the object of pure speculation’ ” (Gov’t Reply at 33:16-18), but that instead “there 6 is some basis for believing that the information sought actually exists.” Church of Scientology, 991 7 F.2d at 562. Thus, the Court can give effect to both section 802 and the Federal Rules by 8 “order[ing] a continuance to enable affidavits to be obtained, depositions to be taken, or other 9 discovery to be undertaken” pursuant to Rule 56(f)(2), and—to the extent necessary—reviewing 10 the results of that discovery in camera. See 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f).

11 Finally, the government concedes that “if the Court requires additional information 12 concerning the certification” it may “address those issues with the Government ex parte, in 13 camera.” Gov’t Reply at 33:6-8. Indeed, the Court “has inherent power to compel a party to 14 produce, without the issuance of a subpoena, documentary evidence within his control and known 15 to be relevant.” Producers Releasing Corp. de Cuba v. PRC Pictures, Inc., 176 F.2d 93, 95 (2d Cir.
16 1949); see also U.S. v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 231 (1975) (court has inherent power to order 17 production to ensure “ ‘full disclosure of all the [relevant] facts’ ”). This “doctrine is rooted in the 18 notion that a federal court, sitting in equity, possesses all of the common law equity tools of a 19 Chancery Court (subject, of course, to congressional limitation) to process litigation to a just and 20 equitable conclusion.” ITT Community Dev. Corp. v. Barton, 569 F.2d 1351, 1359 (5th Cir. 1978) 21 (citing Ex parte Peterson, 253 U.S. 300 (1920)). Thus, even assuming arguendo that Rule 56(f) did 22 not apply, the Court has inherent authority to investigate all of the avenues identified in the Cohn 23 Declaration.

24 C. The Government Has Conceded Key Legal Issues Relevant To The Evaluation
25 Of The Attorney General’s Certification

26 The government has not disputed the critical legal definitions necessary for this Court to 27 properly evaluate the government’s certification. Failure to raise legal issues in connection with 28 summary judgment motions waives those arguments. Heffelfinger v. Electronic Data Sys. Corp., __

1 F. Supp. 2d ___, 2008 WL 2444690 (C.D. Cal. 2008) (failure to address opponent’s arguments on 2 two prongs of legal test constitutes concession that prongs are met). The government does not 3 dispute plaintiffs’ interpretation of the statutory phrases “designed to” or “pursuant to,”³⁵ nor that 4 section 802(a)(3) does not apply to the domestic surveillance at issue here. Pl. Opp. at 43-48.
5 Likewise, the government has not disputed the definitions of “content” and “acquisition” explained 6 in Plaintiffs’ Opposition. Id. at 40-43. Accordingly, the government has conceded these points, and 7 its certification and whether substantial evidence supports it must be adjudicated under the legal 8 standards set forth in Plaintiffs’ Opposition.³⁶

9 VI. The Government Has Not Made Its Case With Admissible Evidence

10 Plaintiffs interposed a number of evidentiary objections (Dkt. 477) to the government’s 11 motion. Those objections rested on the common-sense notion that Congress intended that the term 12 “substantial evidence” in section 802 have its ordinary legal meaning. The government, invoking a 13 sense of entitlement in lieu of addressing why the objections should be overruled, appears to 14 believe that the Court must accept the Attorney General’s certification and the secret 15 “supplemental materials” regardless of the law of evidence. The government makes the nonsensical 16 argument that because the statute authorizes the Attorney General to submit a certification, and to 17 accompany it with “supplemental materials,” the supplemental materials must be, ipso facto, 18 “substantial evidence” in support of the certification. Gov’t Reply at 22:18-23:8. That argument 19 does not follow the statutory language and is not what Congress intended.

20 The irony of the government’s position is that it spent multiple pages in its brief arguing

21 ³⁵ The carriers appear to read “any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to” a 22 particular statutory authority to mean “that person received a piece of paper” naming the statutory 23 authority, but offer no analysis or authority supporting this reading (because there is none).
24 Compare 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(a)(1)-(3) with Carriers’ Br. at 2:7, 16:20, 19:14, and n.11. The mere 25 receipt of a piece of paper purporting to be issued under a statute’s authority is not evidence that the assistance complied with the statute, nor that the assistance provided matched the assistance requested.

26 ³⁶ Section 802’s secrecy provisions only allow for the secret submission of factual matters in 27 the Attorney General’s certification and supplemental materials. See 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(c) & (d).
28 To the extent that the government has responded to plaintiffs’ legal arguments in its secret Supplemental Reply Brief, its argument is improper and should be stricken. Nor is there any reason why the government would need to keep its statutory interpretation arguments secret.

1 that Congress has the constitutional power to enact section 802 and then, when seeking to invoke 2 section 802, ignored the words that Congress actually used. “Substantial evidence” and 3 “supplemental materials” simply are not the same. They appear in different subsections of 4 section 802; if they were meant to be the same, one would be superfluous. Section 802(b)(1) 5 provides that a certification “shall be given effect unless the court finds that such certification is 6 not supported by substantial evidence ...” but section 802(b)(2) provides that “the court may 7 examine...” supplemental materials. 50 U.S.C. § 1885a(b)(1)-(2) (emphases added).

8 This ordinary and natural interpretation of the statutory language, according to the 9 government, “would render Section 802 completely inoperative.” Gov’t Reply at 23:6. The 10 government is wrong. Only the government decides what supplemental materials it will submit on 11 its motion, but the Court decides whether all or any of the supplemental materials constitute 12 substantial evidence, or even admissible evidence, in support of the certification. This is no
13 different than any other evidentiary determination made by a court in any other case, and nothing 14 in either the statute or its legislative history indicates to the contrary. Supplemental materials are 15 only evidence if they are admissible; they are only substantial evidence if they are both admissible 16 and of sufficient weight in light of plaintiffs’ evidence and the rest of the record to satisfy the 17 substantial evidence test.

18 As for the government’s other specific points: First, the government argues that agency
19 officials such as the Attorney General, the Director of National Intelligence and the NSA Director 20 have personal knowledge if they rely on matters learned from a review of their respective agency 21 records. This unremarkable proposition misses the point. Plaintiffs have never had the opportunity 22 to cross-examine the Attorney General, the DNI or the NSA Director to determine, for instance, 23 whether their assertions are in fact based on such a review. In the absence of that opportunity, the 24 certification and the government’s declarations are not admissible against the plaintiffs, see Parts I, 25 III and IV of the evidentiary objections (Dkt. 477). “Testimony presented by affidavit is different 26 from testimony orally delivered, because the affiant is not subject to cross-examination. But that 27 fact leads to greater, not lesser, strictures imposed on the testimony presented by affidavit.” U.S. v.
28 Dibble, 429 F.2d 598, 602 (9th Cir. 1970).
