28 Case No. C-08-4373-VRW

2 I. Introduction

3 The Individual Capacity Defendants (IC Defendants) once again ask the Court to order that 4 they “not be required to answer or otherwise respond to plaintiffs’ complaint until there is a final 5 resolution of whether information subject to the state secrets and related statutory privileges is 6 necessary to litigate plaintiffs claims.” (Dkt. No. 32-1, Proposed Order). Quite plainly, this is a 7 renewed request for an indefinite stay. Plaintiffs ask that this renewed request again be denied.
8 There is no reason why the IC Defendants cannot and should not bring at this time any dispositive 9 motion they wish to make based on the pleadings, including any qualified immunity motion.
10 Plaintiffs would agree to a stay extending only until this Court’s decision on the Government’s 11 pending Motion to Dismiss or in the Alternative for Summary Judgment (Dkt. No. 18), only if the 12 IC Defendants agree to forego any motion to end the litigation based solely on the allegations of 13 the pleadings.

14 While the NSA’s program of wholesale warrantless surveillance of millions of Americans 15 has been ongoing for at least eight years, this case, along with multiple others seeking judicial 16 review of the serious underlying legal and constitutional questions, has essentially languished in 17 preliminary procedural challenges. Plaintiffs started with a case against AT&T in this Court three 18 and a half years ago. When Congress created an obstacle to claims against the telecommunications 19 companies, these same plaintiffs (plus an additional one) brought this case against the Government 20 and government employees nearly a year ago. In the over three years that these cases have been 21 pending, despite the ongoing nature of the harms and the accumulation of a mountain of pleadings 22 and boxes of evidence in support of Plaintiffs’ claims, the Government’s strategy of raising and re-23 raising the same arguments based on the state secrets privilege and other governmental privileges 24 has successfully limited forward motion toward the merits. This, despite repeated rejection of 25 those arguments by both this Court and the Ninth Circuit.

26 Now the IC Defendants seek, for a second time, to rely on those same rejected arguments to 27 gain an indefinite stay of the claims against them. In doing so they ignore the actual standards for

1 granting a stay, and for reconsideration of a previously denied motion, neither of which they can 2 meet.

3 In short, it is long past time to move this case along and allow judicial consideration of the 4 warrantless surveillance of ordinary Americans, as the surveillance program approaches its ninth 5 year. The motion should be denied.

6 II. Background

7 The IC Defendants previously moved this Court for the same stay they seek here on the 8 date their original response was due, in April 2009. (Dkt. No. 22). This Court denied their 9 administrative motion and ordered them to respond, with the date ultimately set for July 15, 2009.
10 (Dkt. Nos. 25, 27). On July 10, 2009, just five days before the new deadline for them to respond, 11 the IC Defendants moved for “relief from the court’s orders of April 27, 2009 and May 8, 2009,” 12 setting their motion for hearing on September 17, 2009. (Dkt. No. 32). Effectively, the IC 13 Defendants unilaterally gave themselves an additional two-month stay. On July 13, 2009, 14 Plaintiffs brought an administrative motion seeking relief from the improper motion for 15 reconsideration (Dkt. No. 33) and the matter was discussed during the hearing on July 15, 2009.
16 (Dkt. No. 37). Plaintiffs’ July administrative motion details why the IC Defendants’ motion fails to 17 meet the standard for a motion for reconsideration set by Local Rule 7-9 and those arguments are 18 incorporated herein by reference.

19 III. Argument

20 A request for an indefinite extension of time to respond is a request for an indefinite stay.
21 Yet the IC Defendants fail to set out, much less satisfy, the standards they must meet to justify such 22 a stay, whether their request is construed as a request for a stay pending appeal of the 23 Government’s motion to dismiss or as a request for an even lengthier stay pending resolution of all 24 issues related to the state secrets privilege.

25 The standard for evaluating a request for a stay pending appeal is similar to that employed 26 by district courts in deciding whether to grant a preliminary injunction. Lopez v. Heckler, 713 F.2d 27 1432, 1435 (9th Cir. 1983), rev’d on other grounds, 463 U.S. 1328 (1983) (noting the common

1 language of the test for stay pending appeal and the test for a preliminary injunction, citing Nevada
2 Airlines, Inc. v. Bond, 622 F.2d 1017, 1018 n.3 (9th Cir. 1980)). In the Ninth Circuit, there are two 3 legal tests for the issuance of a preliminary injunction: a showing of either “(1) a combination of 4 probable success and the possibility of irreparable harm, or (2) that serious questions are raised and 5 the balance of hardship tips in its favor.” Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, Inc. v. PPR Realty, Inc., 6 204 F.3d 867, 874 (9th Cir. 2000), quoting Arcamuzi v. Continental Air Lines, Inc., 819 F.2d 935, 7 937 (9th Cir. 1987); accord Republic of the Philippines v. Marcos, 862 F.2d 1355, 1362 (9th Cir.
8 1988) (en banc); Hoopa Valley Tribe v. Christie, 812 F.2d 1097, 1102 (9th Cir. 1987). These tests 9 are “not separate” but rather represent “the outer reaches ‘of a single continuum.’” Los Angeles
10 Memorial Coliseum Comm’n v. Nat’l Football League, 634 F.2d 1197, 1201 (9th Cir. 1980), 11 quoting Benda v. Grand Lodge of Intern. Ass’n of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, 584 F.2d 12 308, 315 (9th Cir. 1978). Moreover, “the less certain the district court is of the likelihood of 13 success on the merits, the more [the movant] must convince the district court that the public 14 interest and balance of hardships tip in their favor.” Southwest Voter Registration Educ. Project v.
15 Shelley, 344 F.3d 914, 918 (9th Cir. 2003) (en banc, per curiam). When the public interest will be 16 affected by a potential stay, “the public interest is a factor to be strongly considered.” Lopez, 713
17 F.2d at 1435, citing Warm Springs Dam Task Force v. Gribble, 565 F.2d 549, 551 (9th Cir. 1977) 18 (per curiam).

19 Looking beyond the standard for stays pending appeal, the Ninth Circuit follows the general 20 rule from the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision in Landis v. North American Co., 299 U.S. 248 21 (1936), that in order to avoid undue delay, “stays should not be indefinite in nature.” Dependable 22 Highway Express, Inc. v. Navigators Ins. Co., 498 F.3d 1059, 1066 (9th Cir. 2007), citing Yong v.
23 INS, 208 F.3d 1116, 1119 (9th Cir. 2000) (requiring a strong showing to justify an indefinite stay).
24 “In light of the general policy favoring stays of short, or at least reasonable, duration, [a] district 25 court err[s] by issuing a stay without any indication that it [will] last only for a reasonable time.” 26 Dependable Highway Express, 208 F.3d at 1067. Furthermore, as Landis cautions, “‘if there is 27 even a fair possibility that the stay...will work damage to someone else,’ the stay may be

1 inappropriate absent a showing by the moving party of ‘hardship or inequity.’” Dependable 2 Highway Express, 208 F.3d at 1066, quoting Landis, 299 U.S. at 255. Therefore, and to “prevent 3 the ossification of rights which attends inordinate delay,” the court must “balance the length of the 4 stay against the strength of the justification given for it,” and “if a stay is especially long or 5 indefinite,” the court must “require a greater showing to justify it.” Yong, 208 F.3d at 1119 6 (internal quotations and citations omitted). As shown below, the IC Defendants have failed to 7 make any showing that they will be harmed absent a stay, particularly considering that “being 8 required to defend a suit...does not constitute a ‘clear case of hardship or inequity’ within the 9 meaning of Landis.” Dependable Highway Express, 208 F.3d at 1066, quoting Lockyer v. Mirant 10 Corp., 398 F.3d 1098, 1112 (9th Cir. 2005).

11 A. A Stay Is Inappropriate Where There is No Likelihood of Success on the 12 Merits of the Government’s State Secrets Motion.

13 In order to meet the Ninth Circuit standard for a stay pending appeal, the IC Defendants 14 must demonstrate that the Government has a likelihood of success on the merits of its motion to 15 dismiss based on the state secrets privilege. This they cannot do. The Government’s state secrets 16 arguments have all been previously rejected by this Court and the Ninth Circuit. First, arguments 17 virtually identical to those made in the Government’s motion were rejected by this Court in 18 Hepting v. AT&T Corp., 439 F. Supp. 2d 974 (N.D.Cal. 2006) (denying Government’s motion for 19 threshold dismissal based on the state secrets privilege). Meanwhile, in the Al-Haramain case, the 20 Ninth Circuit concluded that the entire subject matter of the NSA program is not a state secret, Al- 21 Haramain v. Bush, 507 F.3d 1190, 1201 (9th Cir. 2007), while this Court concluded that 50 U.S.C.
 22 § 1806(f) of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, “Congress’s specific and detailed 23 prescription for how courts should handle claims by the government that the disclosure of material 24 relating to or derived from electronic surveillance would harm national security,” preempts the 25 common-law state secrets privilege in such cases. In re National Security Agency Telecomm.’s 26 Records Litig., 564 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1119 (N.D. Cal. 2008).<sup>1</sup> Finally and most recently, in 27 <sup>1</sup> Even the Government “recognize[s] the Court has addressed this issue in the Al-Haramain action 28 and is unlikely to change its view.” (Dkt. No. 18 at 24:14-15).

1 Mohamed v. Jeppesen Dataplan, Inc., 563 F.3d 992 (9th Cir. 2009), the Ninth Circuit reaffirmed 2 that threshold dismissal of an action because its “very subject matter” is a state secret is permissible
3 only if the case is based on a secret agreement between the plaintiff and the Government.

4 Mohamed, 563 F.3d at 1004. Taken together, these precedents demonstrate the manifest 5 unlikelihood of success for the Government’s state secrets motion. The Government’s tactical 6 decision to raise these rejected arguments again simply does not meet the high standard of 7 “likelihood of success on the merits” that the Ninth Circuit requires before a court may grant a stay 8 of the case against the IC Defendants.

9 B. Requiring the Individual Capacity Defendants To Bring Their Motion to 10 Dismiss on the Grounds of Qualified Immunity Now Will Not Result in Irreparable Harm.

11 The core practical argument raised by the IC Defendants is that they cannot bring a motion 12 for summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds while the Government’s motion on the state 13 secrets privilege is pending. This assertion fails to demonstrate the irreparable harm required of a 14 stay pending appeal, or the showing of clear hardship and inequity required by Landis and its 15 progeny, because the IC Defendants can assert their qualified immunity defense at this time by 16 means of a motion to dismiss. Nothing about the pendency of the Government’s state secrets 17 privilege motion impairs the IC Defendants’ ability to bring a qualified immunity motion to 18 dismiss, because such a motion would be based on and limited to Plaintiffs’ allegations. Because 19 those allegations have at all times been available for testing against the standards of qualified 20 immunity, the state secrets privilege has no bearing on the IC Defendants’ ability to raise qualified 21 immunity as a threshold matter.

22 Government officials have a right to file a pre-discovery motion to test a plaintiff’s 23 allegations against the qualified immunity standard. A determination that the facts alleged show 24 that an officer’s conduct violated a constitutional right “must be the initial inquiry in every 25 qualified immunity case.” Pearson v. Callahan, 129 S. Ct. 808, 816 (2009), quoting Saucier v.
26 Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201 (2001) (emphasis in original). The standard by which a court must make 27 that determination is an objective one: an official is shielded from liability “insofar as their conduct

1 does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person 2 would have known.” Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 817-818 (1982). This standard is 3 applied in a two-step sequence: first, a court must decide whether the facts that a plaintiff has 4 alleged make out a violation of a constitutional or statutory right; and second, the court must decide 5 whether the right at issue was “clearly established” at the time of defendant's alleged misconduct.
6 Pearson, 129 S. Ct. at 815-16. The sequence may be varied in the court’s sound discretion. Id. at 7 818.

8 An official’s right to qualified immunity is measured against the facts that “a plaintiff has 9 alleged (see Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. 12(b)(6), (c)) or shown (see Rules 50, 56).” Id. at 816.
10 Qualified immunity can be raised at the motion to dismiss stage and in a motion for summary 11 judgment. As the Ninth Circuit has noted, “(1) prior to discovery, the defendants remain free to 12 argue that the law was not clearly established at the time of the alleged constitutional violations and 13 (2) after discovery, the defendants can again move for summary judgment based on 14 nonparticipation in the unconstitutional acts.” Velasquez v. Senko, 813 F.2d 1509, 1512 (9th Cir.
15 1987) (concurring opinion by Hall, J.), citing Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 526-28, 530, 535-16 36 (1985) (emphases in original). The qualified immunity analysis on a motion to dismiss is a 17 “purely legal” question of “whether the facts alleged...support a claim of violation of clearly 18 established law.” Mitchell, 472 U.S. at 528 n.9. Indeed, until that threshold legal question is 19 resolved, discovery is not allowed. Pearson, 129 S. Ct. at 815; see also Siegert v. Gilley, 500 U.S.
20 226, 231-32 (1991).

21 In their brief, the IC Defendants appear to maintain that they have a right to bring a pre-22 discovery motion for summary judgment that is based on facts and evidence that are outside of the 23 four corners of the complaint: “In the current procedural posture of this case, the Government’s 24 state secrets and related statutory privilege assertions preclude the individual capacity defendants 25 from relying on any of the privileged information to seek dismissal on qualified immunity 26 grounds.” (Dkt. No. 32 at 4:7-10). This suggests that the motion that the IC Defendants are 27 considering would rely on classified information to which the Plaintiffs do not have equal access

1 and that the Plaintiffs would have no recourse to Rule 56(f) in response to such a motion.
2 However, nothing in the U.S. Supreme Court’s qualified immunity cases suggests that a 3 government official may make a pre-discovery motion for summary judgment that rests on 4 evidence that is not equally available to both parties. On the contrary, the U.S. Supreme Court has 5 said that the objective test for determining qualified immunity “does not justify a rule that places a 6 thumb on the defendant’s side of the scales when the merits of a claim that the defendant 7 knowingly violated the law are being resolved.” Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 593 (1998).
8 In Crawford-El, the U.S. Supreme Court rejected the idea that a plaintiff must overcome a 9 heightened burden of proof in qualified immunity situations, but the foregoing admonition applies 10 equally well to Rule 56(f). If Rule 56(f) were somehow suspended in a qualified immunity 11 context, then a defendant’s ability to sandbag a plaintiff with new, untested evidence would give a 12 defendant an undue procedural advantage.<sup>2</sup>

13 If the IC Defendants’ position is that they cannot bring any motion to test Plaintiffs’ 14 allegations without recourse to evidence outside the four corners of the complaint, then they have 15 tacitly conceded the legal portion of the qualified immunity test. They have conceded that the 16 “purely legal” question of “whether the facts alleged...support a claim of violation of clearly 17 established law” has been satisfied. Mitchell, 472 U.S. at 528 n.9. If that is indeed the IC 18 Defendants’ position—that there is no dispositive motion they can make based solely on the 19

20 _____
21 <sup>2</sup> The Circuit Court of Appeals cases that the IC Defendants cite do not hold to the contrary. Each 22 involves a motion to test the sufficiency of a plaintiff’s alleged facts against the objective qualified 23 immunity standard. See Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Louisiana Dept. of Ins., 62 F.3d 115 (5th Cir.
24 1995) (district court reversed for permitting limited discovery before addressing the threshold legal 25 question of whether plaintiffs stated a claim for violation of a constitutional right); Elliot v.
26 Thomas, 937 F.2d 338 (7th Cir. 1991) (plaintiff did not include specific non-conclusory allegations 27 in her complaint from which to infer officials’ improper intent); and Kluver v. Sheets, 27 Fed.
28 Appx. 873 (9th Cir. 2001) (facts alleged by plaintiff, construed in his favor, did not amount to a violation of federal law). The only arguable exception is Lewis v. City of Ft. Collins, 903 F.2d 752 (10th Cir. 1990), which arose when the Circuit Courts were struggling with the issue of reconciling the objective standard for qualified immunity with situations in which a government official’s state of mind (e.g., racial prejudice) formed a part of the claim. The U.S. Supreme Court resolved the issue in Crawford-El. To the extent that Lewis suggested a procedure at odds with Crawford-El, it was overruled.

1 pleadings—then Plaintiffs do not oppose a stay pending the outcome of the Government’s motion 2 to dismiss.<sup>3</sup>

3 If, on the other hand, the IC Defendants’ position is that they wish to file a motion to 4 dismiss on qualified immunity grounds, then all that they need to test Plaintiffs’ allegations is 5 already set out in Plaintiffs’ complaint. The IC Defendants should proceed to file that motion to 6 dismiss immediately. This is what happened in Hepting v. AT&T and the MCI/Verizon cases. The 7 private defendants filed motions seeking various forms of immunity simultaneous with the 8 Government’s motion to dismiss based on state secrets, and this Court was able to simultaneously 9 consider and rule upon both the Government’s motion and carrier motions without any hardship for 10 the Court or any party. See generally Hepting, 439 F. Supp. 2d 974; see also Verizon’s Motion To 11 Dismiss Plaintiffs’ Master Consolidated Complaint (MDL 06-01791, Dkt. No. 273).

12 What Plaintiffs wish to avoid is a situation in which they wait several months, or even 13 years, to face a motion to dismiss that could have been brought now, resulting in further 14 unwarranted delay and the unjustified de facto bifurcation of their claims against the IC Defendants 15 from their claims against the Government and the official capacity defendants. If the IC 16 Defendants have a motion that can be brought solely on the pleadings to test legal questions, they

18
19 <sup>3</sup>The IC Defendants incorrectly assert that evidence establishing qualified immunity can take the 20 form of evidence showing that: “the alleged activities did not occur at all; a particular plaintiff was 21 not subjected to the alleged conduct; the particular defendants were not involved in the alleged 22 activities in general; [or] the particular defendants were not involved in subjecting a particular 23 plaintiff to the alleged conduct.” (Dkt. No. 32 at 4 n.3). All of this evidence, however, goes to the 24 merits, not to the qualified immunity defense. The IC Defendants thus confuse qualified 25 immunity—which is a type of immunity accorded to officials who do not violate clearly 26 established law—with the myriad different ways that a government official might defeat a 27 plaintiff’s claim on the merits. Indeed, the IC Defendants do not cite to a qualified immunity case 28 to support their statement but to a state secrets privilege case, El-Masri v. U.S., 479 F.3d 296, 309
(4th. Cir. 2007). In El-Masri, the Fourth Circuit listed different ways in a government official’s ability to defend on the merits would require evidence that might disclose the CIA’s confidential means and methods. Id.

The two other categories of “evidence” that the IC Defendants put forward—whether “the alleged activities are lawful in general” or are “lawful as applied to a particular plaintiff” (Dkt. No. 32 at 4 n.3)—are not factual issues but questions of law that, as to the “alleged activities,” are decided on the basis of the complaint’s allegations, not on the basis of an evidentiary record.
